H. HYDE,
Head Commissioner.

From E. H. LUSHINGTON, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, Financial Department, to the Head Commissioner of Paper Currency, Calcutta,—No. 2836, dated 15th October 1868.

I have laid before the Governor General in Council your letter, dated 1st September 1868, submitting a retrospective report of the operations of the Currency Department since its commencement, and am desired to communicate the following observations.

2. In the first place the fact that in 1861-62, when the three Presidency Banks had this currency, the issues for all India amounted to £3⅛ millions, that in 1867-68 after six years of Government management, the total issues averaged 9¼ millions on the year; and that for some months past they have stood at a little over 10 millions with a tendency to increase still more, shows that the currency has obtained a great development. The result may not as yet have come up to the anticipations of the founder, the late Mr. James Wilson, but still a good part of his expectations has been already realized.

3. This great increase has been obtained partly by development in the Presidency towns or in the old circles, and partly by the formation of new circles in the interior of the country. In the Presidency towns, the increase has been in Calcutta from 2⅓ millions to something under 3 millions; in Madras from something under half a million to something over that amount; in Bombay from 1½ to 4¾ millions. Thus, the growth in Calcutta has been good; in Madras unimportant; in Bombay very great, the like of which indeed has never yet been known in India. And it is noteworthy that much of the increment in Bombay has occurred since the culminating point of the cotton crisis; in 1864-65 and 1865-66, the amount stood at 3¼ and 3⅓ millions. In 1866-67 and 1867-68, they stood at 4½ and 4¾ millions. As regards the circles in the interior of the country, it may be noted that out of 928 lakhs, the total circulation, 32 lakhs pertained to Allahabad; 24 to Lahore; 5½ to Calicut; 4½ to Trichinopoly; 3 to Vizagapatam; 21 to Nagpore; 15 to Kurrachee: in all 105 lakhs, or just one-ninth of the whole. Hence it is manifest that, despite all our efforts at extension into the interior of India, the great increase occurs, not there but at the Presidency towns, the great outlets of trade. In the interior circles, too, the success achieved in the valley of the Ganges and of the Indus, i. e., Allahabad, Lahore, and Kurrachee, and in that part of Central India which is in communication with the Western Coast, that is Nagpore. But the circles in the south of India have as yet been comparative failures; they may still improve.

4. On the whole circulation, there has been no fluctuation, but steady progressive growth year by year. The same thing too is perceptible in each circle. In Madras, Lahore, and Vizagapatam circles alone, has there been anything like fluctuation, and that not considerable.

5. These broad facts bear out the well known belief that as yet our Notes, however popular with the upper section of the trading classes, have not yet reached the mass of the people and the interior of the country.

6. But that the expansion (undoubtedly great) which has occurred, has been obtained with perfect caution, and without any real risk whatever, will be apparent from a consideration of the specie reserve which has been and still is kept up. In January 1867 to a circulation of 868 lakhs, there was a reserve in coin and bullion of 532 lakhs; the difference being represented by Government Securities. In January 1868 to a circulation of ten crores or 1,000 lakhs, there was a coin and bullion reserve of 684 lakhs. At both periods more than half the circulation was represented by coin and bullion.

7. On the other hand, it is interesting to observe the amount of reserve in Government Securities at different periods, as it is this which indicates the profit derived by the State from the currency. In January 1865 it stood at 357 lakhs; in January 1866 at 398 lakhs (the highest figure as yet ventured on); in January 1867 at 336 lakhs, and in January 1868 at 325 lakhs. In 1865 the securities represented about one-half of the circulation; in 1866 something less than one-half; in 1867 and 1868, it has represented about one-third. The gross profit to Government (without making any set-off on account of expenses) has averaged 16½ lakhs annually for the past three years.

8. The profits, net, after defrayal of all expenses, to the State are set down at 34 lakhs, accruing in six years. But this profit may be expected to go on at an increase. During the year 1867-68, the last year, when the organization of the department has been the most complete, the net profit is set down at 10½ lakhs. It has been seen that the average circulation of that year amounted to 9¼ millions. At this rate the Government may hope to obtain about 1¼ lakh annual net profit on a million's worth of circulation. But the fact that this business is already worth more than ten lakhs net a year to the State, with a prospect of further increase, should serve to keep all the revenue officers alive to the importance of augmenting the circulation by all legitimate means in their power, and especially by popularizing it.

9. The smallness of the salaried establishments entertained by Government for this work is noteworthy. Of the expenses more than two-thirds consist of commission paid to the Banks for exchange transactions with the public. In Calcutta itself during 1866-67 out of 5 lakhs total expenses, only half a lakh related to establishments and office contingencies. This seems to show that the departmental management is tolerably economical.

10. On the other hand, the real vastness of the business that has been done in seven years may be understood by considering that in this period seven millions of Notes, worth 87 crores of rupees, have been issued, five millions and three quarters of Notes, worth 75 crores of rupees, have been received, two millions and three quarters of Notes, worth 30 crores of rupees, have been cancelled.

11. Without in the least impugning the excellence of the management of the currency by the Presidency Banks while they had it, and without at all under-valuing the merits of the agreement entered into with them, the Governor General in Council believes that undoubtedly the working of this business by Government through its own agency direct has proved both economical and profitable to the State. This too may be still further apparent if circles come to be multiplied in the interior of the country.

12. The Governor General in Council desires me to convey his thanks to you and the officers of the department, and to observe that any improvement for the future can be best determined on after the replies have been received from the several Local Governments to our circular of June last in respect to the distribution of currency circles.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA, ASSEMBLED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF PARLIAMENT, 24 & 25 VIC., CAP. 67.

The Council met at Simla on Wednesday, the 4th November 1868.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, presiding.
His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.S.I., K.C.B.
The Hon'ble G. N. Taylor.
The Hon'ble H. S. Maine.
The Hon'ble John Strachey.
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble Colonel H. W. Norman, C.B.

ARTICLES OF WAR.

The Hon'ble Colonel NORMAN introduced the Bill to consolidate and amend the Articles of War for the government of Her Majesty's Native Indian Forces.

As he had explained to the Council when he obtained leave to introduce the Bill, the existing law for the government of the Native Army was contained in Act XXIX of 1861, as amended by Acts V of 1863 and XXVI of 1865, and certain changes being deemed necessary, it was considered advisable to embody them and the large portions of the existing Acts which it was proposed to be retained in an entirely new Bill, which, if passed, would constitute the entire law for the government of Her Majesty's Native Indian Forces.

All the principal alterations in the existing law were noted in the Statement of Objects and Reasons attached to the Bill, and he did not at present propose to enter into any detailed explanation as to those alterations beyond what was contained in that statement. They had been carefully considered and discussed outside this Council, but the Bill would be published and would of course be open to any improvement that might be deemed desirable by the Select Committee to which he would at a future sitting move that the Bill be referred.

Besides certain changes in substance, the present Bill contained various alterations and, as he (Colonel NORMAN) thought, improvements in point of arrangement and language calculated, he trusted, to make the Articles more clear and intelligible to the officers who would have to administer them, and to those soldiers and others who would be subject to them. He (Colonel NORMAN) desired to acknowledge the obligations he was under in the preparation of the Bill to the Judge Advocate General's Department, and especially to Lieutenant Colonel Maisey, who, as Officiating Judge Advocate General at the time, drew out the original draft of the Bill under the orders of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and had since very ably and assiduously assisted him in its elaboration. He (Colonel NORMAN) was also most highly indebted to Mr. Whitley Stokes, who had devoted much time and care to the Bill, and whose suggestions as to arrangement and phraseology had been most valuable.

His Excellency the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, by permission of the President, said that, although there was no motion before the Council, he thought it right to say that the several provisions of the Bill had received great attention. The matter indeed had been under consideration now for not less than six years between the several Governments and the respective Commanders-in-Chief. At this stage there was one point only,—the limitation of the power to try by Summary Courts Martial,—to which he deemed it right to invite notice. If no remarks were made upon it, some persons might suppose that the limitation in question would restrict the military powers of the commanding officer. Nothing would be more erroneous. It had been his (the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF's) duty when in command at Bombay to point out that the mode of applying the powers of such courts was occasionally wrong. Certain commanding officers, not well versed in law, either civil or military, had actually held Summary Courts Martial to try offences against themselves, and even against their own property. And subsequently, since His Excellency had assumed his present command, he had found it necessary to check similar practices in this Presidency. It would be remembered that this kind of Courts was constituted of the officer by whom it was held. Article 93 of the present Bill accordingly provided expressly that offences by which the convening commanding officer was personally aggrieved and crimes of fraudulent character, should, as a rule, not be tried by Summary Courts Martial without reference made to superior military authority. This was the only limitation on the power referred to, and His Excellency wished the public to understand that the Bill would not in any way diminish proper military powers.

HIGH COURT (N. W. P.) CRIMINAL PROCEDURE BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE, in moving for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Criminal Procedure of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, said that, though the Bill covered some space, it was merely intended to remove two technical difficulties. The High Court for the North-Western Provinces possessed two original criminal jurisdictions,—one ordinary, the other extraordinary: European British subjects were triable in the exercise of the former, Natives in the exercise of the latter. Now, it sometimes happened that an European and a Native were jointly charged with an offence and then the most convenient course would obviously be to try them together. But when an European was tried, the majority of the jury had to be composed of Europeans or Americans, or both, and the procedure was regulated by Act No. XXIV of 1866; when a Native was tried, half the jury was, if he so required, composed of persons not Europeans nor Americans, and the procedure was wholly regulated by the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Bill gave power to try the European and the Native together, but saved the Native's right (if he chose to exercise it) to be tried separately by a jury, of which at least one-half consisted of persons not Europeans nor Americans.

There was another amendment of less importance which the Bill proposed to make. The High Court was subject, in exercise both of its ordinary and of its extraordinary criminal jurisdiction, to the rules of the Code of Criminal Procedure, except in so far as these rules had been modified by Act XXIV of 1866. Of these rules, those prescribing the mode in which Judges should take down evidence were unmodified. They were contained in sections 198 and 364 of the Code. They had been framed for the guidance of Judges from whom there was an appeal, and for this and other reasons they were wholly unsuited to the learned Judges of the High Court. The Bill accordingly proposed to suspend the operation in the High Court of the two sections which he had mentioned, and to enable the Judges to take down the evidence in such manner as the Court might by general rule direct.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE then introduced the Bill.

The Council then adjourned to Friday, the 27th November 1868.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

LEGISLATIVE.

The following Bill was introduced into the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 28th October 1868:—

No. 26 of 1868.

A Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence.

PREAMBLE.

WHEREAS it is expedient to define and amend the Law of Evidence: It is hereby enacted as follows:—

MEANING OF WORDS.

1. In the following rules, the word Court shall be taken to comprise all Courts of Justice, civil or criminal, and all persons having by law or consent of parties authority to take evidence; and the word Cause shall be taken to comprise all judicial proceedings, civil or criminal.

ADMISSIBILITY.

2. Whenever any evidence is said to be admissible, it is not meant that it is to be regarded as conclusive, but only that the weight, if any, which the deciding authority may consider due, shall be allowed to it.

Anything which has a bearing upon any question in issue in a cause, the determination of which question is material to the decision of the cause, is admissible, unless it is excluded by the rules contained in this Act.

3. No statement by a witness of anything, or founded upon anything spoken, written, or otherwise intimated by another person, and no statement contained in any document is admissible in evidence, except in the cases specified in the rules hereinafter contained.

Illustrations.

(a.)—B is tried for robbing C. A gives evidence that D told him that he saw B rob C. The evidence is inadmissible.

(b.)—B is tried for robbing C. A gives evidence that D, a deaf and dumb person, intimated to him by signs that he saw B rob C. The evidence is inadmissible.

(c.) A gives evidence that B robbed C. Being asked how he knows it, he says that he knows it only because E told him so. The evidence which has been admitted must be struck out.

(d.)—A says that B was alive on the 1st January 1860. It appears that A does not speak to this fact of his own knowledge, but that he learnt it from a letter written to him by C, or from a newspaper, or from a printed book, or a picture. In each of these cases, A's statement is not admissible as evidence that B was alive on that day.

(e.)—A says that B was alive on the 1st January 1860. Being asked how he knows this, he produces a letter dated that day from B, whose hand-writing he verifies. The letter is admissible as evidence that B was alive on that day.

4. Such evidence is admissible,—

(1.) Where the fact that a thing was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated is a question in issue.

Illustration.

A says that he has been told by B that he saw C pick D's pocket. This is admissible in an action against B for slandering C.

(2.)—Where the fact that a person by or to whom the thing was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated, was acquainted with such thing is a question in issue.

Illustration.

A writes to B "I have just heard that C has failed." The letter is received by B. The letter is not admissible as evidence that C had failed; but when it is proved that C had then failed, the letter is admissible as evidence that the failure was known to A at the place and time at which the letter was written, and also that B was apprised of it.

(3.)—Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated tends to explain any act or conduct which is a question in issue.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A says on a trial of C for robbing D's house, that he heard B say to C "D's house has been robbed," and that thereupon C fled. This evidence is admissible.

(b.)—On a trial of B for robbing C's house, it is proved that B fled immediately after the robbery. A witness is produced who says that he heard A tell B before B fled, that a warrant had been issued for his arrest under a decree of a civil court. This evidence is admissible.

(c.)—A is on his trial for shooting at B with intent to kill him. It is alleged on A's behalf that the shooting was accidental. Evidence of what A said at the time is admissible as evidence, either for A or against him.

(d.)—A sues B for compensation for maliciously causing him to be apprehended on a charge of theft. Evidence that a theft had been committed in B's house, and that C told B that he saw A running away immediately after, is admissible.

(e.)—A says that he has heard B say to C, "Pay me the 1,000 rupees which you owe me." This is no evidence that C owed B 1,000 rupees, but it is evidence that B claimed 1,000 rupees, and it is admissible in order to introduce evidence of what C said or did with respect to the claim.

(f.)—A is charged with sedition, and is proved to have combined with B for seditious purposes. Evidence of words spoken by B, while taking part in a riot in furtherance of those purposes, is admissible against A.

(4.)—Where the thing was spoken, written, stated or otherwise intimated by a party to the suit, or some one whom he represents in interest, and it is sought to be used against him.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A brings a suit against B to establish a right of way across B's field. Evidence that C, from whom B derives his title to the land, had, while owner, admitted A's right of way, is admissible.

(b.)—A writes to B "By the direction of C, I request you will ship for him 100 bales of cotton." The letter is evidence against A that he had received such direction from C but is not evidence against C that he had given the direction.

(c.)—In a deed to which A was not a party, but which was made between B and C, strangers to A, it is stated that A had become insolvent. This deed is as against B or C admissible in evidence to show that A had become insolvent, but it is not admissible against A for that purpose.

(5.)—In the cases provided for by Sections 368, 369, 370 and 371 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(6.)—Where the evidence tendered consists in a statement which was received in evidence in a former judicial proceeding relating to the same subject and between the same parties, or those whom they represent in interest, and where the person who made such statement has since died, or become incapable of giving evidence, or where his presence cannot be procured: provided that if such person were present, his evidence would be admissible.

(7.) Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated in the ordinary course of business by a person who has died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A, the shipping agent of the firm of B and Co., states in a letter to B and Co. that he has just seen a certain ship of theirs sail from the port of Calcutta. The letter is admissible as evidence of the sailing of the ship.

(b.)—A, an attorney, prepares the draft of an intended deed to which B was to be a party, and indorses upon it a memorandum that a copy had been sent to another attorney on a certain day. The draft contains a statement that B was in insolvent circumstances. The draft and indorsement are admissible as evidence to show that such a copy was sent to the other attorney, but are not admissible as evidence to show that B had become insolvent.

(c.)—A, a commercial traveller, employed by the firm of B and Co. to obtain orders and information in the cotton trade only, writes to B and Co. that the firm of C and Co. have ordered of him as such traveller a certain quantity of cotton, and in the same letter he mentions the state of the silk market. A's letter is admissible as evidence of the order given to him, but not of the state of the silk market.

(8.)—Where the thing intimated consists in entries in books kept in the ordinary course of business, or consists in written acknowledgments of the receipt of money, goods, securities, or property of any kind, or in any document used in commerce.

Illustrations.

(a.)—Entries are made by a clerk of a firm in the books of the firm to the effect that the firm received a consignment of cotton from A, and purchased 50 chests of indigo from B. These are admissible in evidence against all the partners of the firm.

(b.)—A, one of two partners, makes an entry in the partnership books that he had lent his partner B Rupees 1,000. The entry is not admissible in evidence against B that A had lent him the Rupees 1,000.

(c.)—A clerk whose business it is to make entries in the books of a firm of all monies paid by him, makes an entry in the books that he had paid away Rupees 1,000 for the firm. This entry is admissible in evidence that he had so paid away the money.

(d.)—The firm of A and Co. keep a book in which the despatch and receipt of letters by the firm is regularly noted. An entry in this book of the despatch of a letter on the 1st January 1860 to the firm of B and Co. is admissible in evidence that a letter was despatched on that day by A and Co. to B and Co.

(e.)—The letters written by the firm of A and Co. are, according to the ordinary course of business, copied into a book, and afterwards despatched. A and Co. in order to show that a letter in stated terms was despatched by them on a certain day to B and Co., tender in evidence an entry in their letter-book purporting to be a copy of a letter addressed by them on that day to B and Co., and an entry of the fact that such letter was despatched. The entries are admissible.

(f.)—A guarantees the payment by C of a sum of money due from him to B. A pays the amount to B, and sues C for re-payment. A tenders in evidence a receipt given to himself by B for the amount due. The receipt is admissible in evidence.

(g.)—A sues B for the proceeds of a cargo of cotton consigned by A to B, and sold through a broker. The account sales rendered by the broker are admissible in evidence.

(h.)—A, a wharfinger, gives to B an acknowledgment that 100 tons of copper have been deposited at A's wharf. This acknowledgment is admissible in evidence of the fact that the deposit has been made.

(i.)—A effects a policy on his ship against sea-risks. The ship goes to sea and sustains injury. A institutes a suit to recover damages from the underwriters. The log-book of the ship is admissible in evidence.

(9.)—Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated relates to the usages or tenets of any body of men, the constitution or government of any religious or charitable foundation, or the meaning of any technical or conventional words or terms, or of any words or terms used in particular districts, or to any matter of public or general interest, and was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A, in order to show the religious tenets of a certain sect, tenders in evidence a manuscript treatise proved to have been written by a deceased member of the sect. The treatise is admissible.

(b.)—It is a disputed fact in a suit whether a certain spot is or is not a public landing-place. Statements made on the subject by A and B, now deceased, who resided in the neighbourhood, are admissible in evidence.

(10.)—Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated has reference to the relationship of one person to another, and was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured: provided that such person was a member of the family, or had otherwise special means of knowledge.

Illustrations.

(a.)—It is a disputed fact in the suit whether A is the son of B. A statement made on the subject by C, who was a nurse in B's family about the time of A's birth, is admissible in evidence.

(b.)—A alleging that he is the son of B, deceased, produces the following documents in which he is mentioned as the son of B:—

1. An entry made by B in a memorandum book stating A's birth;
2. Letters which passed between two of B's brothers, since deceased;
3. A deed executed by B.

A also produces witnesses who state that B told them that A was his son.

The contents of the documents and the testimony of the witnesses are admissible in evidence.

(11.)—Where the thing intimated is a fact of a public nature and appears by a recital contained in any Act of the Governor General of India made before or after the passing of this Act, or is notified by any official communication of the Government appearing in the Gazette of India, or in any paper purporting to be the Government Gazette of any Presidency or Lieutenant Governorship of British India, or of any colony or possession of the British Crown.

(12.)—Where the thing intimated is that there has been a public meeting or public proceeding, and such intimation is contained in a report thereof published in any newspaper or journal.

Explanation.—Such report is not admissible in evidence of any fact reported to have occurred, or of any statement reported to have been made at the meeting or proceeding.

Evidence of Law of Foreign Country.

(13.)—Where the thing intimated purports to be the law of a foreign country, and appears to be contained in books or documents purporting to be printed or published under the authority of the Government of that country, or in reports of decisions of the Courts of such country.

Maps.

5. Maps made under the authority of Government shall be admissible as evidence.

"Res Judicata."

6. A grant of probate or of administration unrevoked shall have effect as provided by the Indian Succession Act, section 242.

7. A decree declaring a marriage void is proof that the parties never were husband and wife. A decree declaring a marriage dissolved is proof that the parties have ceased to be husband and wife, if they ever were such.

8. A decree adjudging a ship to the captors as a prize of war is proof that the ship has become the property of the captors.

9. The judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction upon a matter directly in issue is admissible as evidence between the same parties, and those who represent them in interest upon the same matter directly in issue in another cause; but not between any other parties, except as provided for in the next following section of this Act.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A sues B for a horse, alleging that it was stolen from himself, and that B bought it, knowing it to be stolen. Judgment is given in B's favor. B afterwards loses the horse. A finds it, and B sues A for it. A in defence makes the same allegations as in the former suit. The judgment pronounced in the former suit is admissible as evidence in B's favor.

(b.)—A sues B for rent in the Court of the Collector, which has cognizance of such suits. B sets up in defence a mortgage under which he is entitled to retain the rent in satisfaction of the interest of his mortgage. A disputes the genuineness of the mortgage, but the Court pronounces it genuine, and dismisses A's suit. Afterwards B sues A in the District Court to recover the amount due to him upon the mortgage. A disputes the genuineness of the mortgage. The judgment of the Collector is admissible in evidence.

10. A decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction is admissible as evidence that such a judgment pronounced between the parties, but is not as against any person other than the parties thereto and those who represent them in interest evidence of any other fact thereby appearing.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A sues B for compensation for injury sustained through the negligence of C, who is B's agent. A obtains judgment. In a suit brought by B against C for compensation for loss sustained by B through C's negligence, the judgment is admissible as evidence of the amount which A has been adjudged to pay, but not as evidence of B's negligence.

(b.)—A. sues B for compensation, because B yielded up to C certain lands which B held as guardian of A, who was then a minor. A decree passed in a prior suit, whereby B was directed to yield up possession to C as owner, is admissible in evidence.

(c.)—A is tried on the charge of having forged a deed of gift from B. He is acquitted. Afterwards C, alleging the deed of gift to be a forgery, institutes a suit against A for certain lands, of which A has obtained possession under it. The record of A's acquittal is not admissible in evidence.

(d.)—A, one of three Hindú brothers, undivided in estate, dies, and his brothers B and C alleging that they are his heirs, sell to D a portion of the land which they possessed jointly with A.

E, claiming as the adopted son and heir of A, sues D for A's share of the land sold to D, and obtains a decree in his favor. He afterwards claiming as such adopted son of A, sues B and C for A's share of the land which remains in their possession. The decree in the former suit is not admissible in evidence.

(e.)—A, alleging that he is the only brother and the heir of B, deceased, sues C for possession of B's land. The Court declares A's title established, and decrees that C shall yield up the land to him.

Afterwards D claims to be the son and heir of B, and sues A for possession of the lands. The decree in the former suit is admissible in evidence that A had obtained such a decree, but is not admissible as evidence that he was entitled to the land as the only brother and heir of B.

(f.)—Two ships come into collision, whereby A, a passenger in one of them, is maimed, and B's goods are destroyed. A obtains a decree for compensation from the owners of the other ship on the ground that the injuries were sustained by him through the negligence of their captain. B sues the owners of the same ship for compensation for the loss of his goods. The judgment is not admissible in B's suit as evidence of the captain's negligence.

(g.)—A sues B for maintenance of C, a minor, whom A alleges to be B's son. B denies that C is his son. The Court decides that C is B's son, and decrees payment by B of A's claims.

B dies. C, alleging that he is B's son, sues the executor of D for a legacy of 10,000 rupees; D having by his will bequeathed that sum to every child of B. The judgment is not admissible in evidence that C is not a son of B.

Proof of Writings which constitute primary evidence

11. A writing which is not required by law to be attested, but which is alleged to have been signed by a specified person, or to have been written wholly or in part by a specified person, shall not, except in the cases provided for by sections 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21 of this Act, be received as evidence, unless the signature attached thereto or so much of the same writing as it is sought to verify, be proved to be in the hand-writing of the person by whom it is alleged to have been written or signed.

12. A written instrument which is required by law to be attested, shall not (except in the cases provided for by s. 20 of this Act) be received as evidence, unless the following rules are complied with :—

(1.)—The execution of such instrument shall be proved by one attesting witness at the least if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the Court by which the cause is tried, and capable of bearing testimony.

(2.)—If no attesting witness is alive and subject to such process as aforesaid, and capable of bearing testimony, it shall be proved that the attestation of one attesting witness at the least is in his hand-writing, and evidence must be adduced to show that the person who executed the instrument was the same person who is alleged to have done so.

13. In order to ascertain whether a signature, writing, or seal is genuine, any signature, writing, or seal, which has been admitted or proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine, may be compared with the disputed one.

14. Where a written instrument purports or is proved to be thirty years old, and is produced from the proper custody, it shall be admissible in evidence without proof of its execution or attestation.

Proof of the Contents of Documents by Secondary Evidence.

15. Evidence of the contents or purport of any written or printed document, or of letters, figures, or other marks not produced to the Court, shall not be admissible, except as provided by the rules next following :—

(1.)—A copy of or extract from any proclamation, order, or regulation, issued by Her Majesty or by the Privy Council or any department of Her Majesty's Government shall be admissible in evidence: Provided that such copy or extract is contained in the London Gazette or in such other Gazette or paper as mentioned in section four, clause (11) of this Act: Or provided it purports to be printed by the Government printer, or to be printed under the authority of the Legislature of any British colony or possession, or to be certified to be true by the proper officer.

(2.)—A copy of a record of any court, or of an entry in any public book or register, which is proved to be a correct copy, or which purports to be under the seal of such Court, or to be certified by the proper officer, shall be admissible as evidence of the existence and the contents of any such record or entry.

(3.)—Evidence shall be admissible of inscriptions or marks which are proved to have been destroyed or lost, or which cannot be produced by reason of their being engraved on or affixed to trees, buildings, or other things of an immoveable character.

(4.)—Evidence of the contents of a written or printed document shall be admissible when it has been proved that the document has been destroyed or lost, or when the person in whose custody it is, is not subject to the process of the Court by which the cause is tried, or is not legally bound to produce the document, or refuses, after due notice, to produce it, or when its absence is otherwise satisfactorily accounted for.

Evidence of Terms of Contract.

16. Where a contract or a grant or other disposition of property is in writing, no evidence of the terms of such contract, grant, or disposition shall be received, except the writing itself, or such evidence of its contents as may be admissible under the provisions of the last preceding section.

Explanation.—The statement of a fact in any such document does not preclude the admission of oral evidence relating to the same fact; and where a suit is instituted for the purpose of setting aside or varying a document on the ground of a mistake in the writing thereof, evidence may be received for the purpose of proving such mistake.

Papers of which proof is not required.

17. No proof shall be required of the genuineness of any paper purporting to be the London Gazette or the Gazette of India or the Government Gazette of any Presidency or Lieutenant Governorship of British India, or of any colony or possession of the British Crown, nor of any paper purporting to be a newspaper or journal, or a copy of a private Act of Parliament printed by the Queen's printer.

18. No proof shall be required of the genuineness of any paper purporting to be a certificate, certified copy or other document which is by law made evidence of any particular fact: Provided that such paper is substantially in the form and purports to be executed in the manner directed by the law in that behalf.

19. No proof shall be required of the official position of any person certifying to the truth of any such paper as is mentioned in the last preceding rule.

20. Any paper purporting to be a power of attorney, and to have been executed before and authenticated by a notary public or any Court, Judge, Magistrate, British Consul or Vice-Consul, or representative of Her Majesty, or of the Government of India, shall be admissible in evidence.

21. An impression of any document made by copying machine, or a representation of any thing made by means of photography, or of any other process which affords a reasonable assurance of correctness, shall be admissible in evidence, wherever under these Rules the production of the original may be dispensed with.

Persons who may testify.

22. Those persons only shall be incompetent to testify who from tender years, or from unsoundness of mind, or from any other cause appear to the judge to be incapable of understanding the questions addressed to them.

Privilege.

23. A witness is not at liberty to disclose a communication,—

(1.)—When such communication relates to affairs of State, and its disclosure has not been sanctioned by the proper officer.

(2.)—Where the communication was made by one of a married couple to the other during their marriage, and did not relate to a matter then in dispute in a suit pending between them, and where the consent of the person who made it, or, if such person be dead, of his or her representative in interest, has not been obtained for such disclosure.

(3.)—Where the witness is a barrister, attorney, or vakeel, or an interpreter or intermediate agent between the client and his legal adviser, and the communication was made by the client or principal to the witness in the course of his professional employment, or consists of any advice given or conveyed by the witness professionally to his client or principal, or of the contents of any document of his client or principal, the knowledge of which the witness has acquired in the course of his professional employment, and where the client or principal or his representative in interest has not consented to the disclosure of such communication.

(4.) Where the disclosure demanded of the witness consists in the production of documents belonging to another person who would not be bound to produce them if in his possession, and who has not consented to their production.

24. A witness is not compellable to disclose to the Court any confidential communication which may have taken place between him and his legal professional adviser.

25. No communication made in furtherance of a criminal purpose is protected from disclosure.

26. A witness summoned to produce a document shall, if the same be in his custody, possession, or power, be bound to bring it into Court, notwithstanding any objection to the right of the party calling for it to compel its production or to its being read, or being put in as evidence, or to the disclosure of its contents.

The validity of any such objection made by the person bringing the document shall be determined by the Court; and for the better determination thereof, it shall be lawful for the Court to receive any admissible evidence which such person may give respecting it, and it shall also be lawful for the Court, unless the document relates to affairs of State, to inspect it, and, if necessary, to employ any person to interpret it under the obligation of an oath, and not to disclose its contents except to the Court, unless the Court shall decide that the document is to be given in evidence.

27. No question shall be put to a married person which substantially amounts to inquiring whether that person has had sexual intercourse forbidden to him or her by the law to which he or she is subject.

28. No question regarding the occurrence of sexual intercourse between a husband and wife shall be put to either of them, except in the case of Christians, where the suit is for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of bodily incapacity; and except in the case of persons who are not Christians, where the knowledge of the fact inquired after is necessary to the determination of some question between the husband and wife according to the law to which they are subject.

Examination of Witnesses.

29. The party at whose instance a witness is examined may, with the permission of the Court, cross-examine such witness, to test his veracity, in the same manner as if the witness had not been called at his instance, and may be allowed to show that the witness has varied from a previous statement made by him.

30. In order to repel an attack on the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness, relating to the same fact, at or about the time when the fact took place, before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact, shall be admissible, and for that purpose a copy duly certified of any deposition or statement taken before such authority shall be admissible in evidence that such deposition or statement was made, and that it was made at the time and place, and under the circumstances, if any, which shall be stated in the certificate or on the face of the deposition or statement.

31. It shall not be lawful to ask a witness, in order to test his credit, any question the answer to which might criminate, or might tend, directly or indirectly, to criminate him, or might expose or tend, directly or indirectly, to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture of any kind. But a witness shall not be excused from answering any question relevant to the matter in issue in any cause upon the ground that the answer to such question would or might criminate, or tend to criminate him, or that it would or might expose, or tend to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture. Provided that no answer which a witness shall be compelled to give shall, except for the purpose of punishing him for wilfully giving false evidence in such cause, be used as evidence against him in any criminal proceeding.

32. No evidence is admissible to contradict the answers of a party or a witness as to matters affecting his character, but not otherwise bearing upon any question in issue in the cause.

Evidence of statements or conduct of a witness inconsistent with his evidence as to a question directly in issue in a cause is not excluded by this rule.

Illustrations.

(a.) A claim against an underwriter is resisted on the ground of fraud. The party claimant is asked whether in a former transaction he had not made a fraudulent claim. He denies it. Evidence is not admissible to show that he had made such fraudulent claim.

(b.) In a suit by A against B a witness for A is asked whether he had not been dismissed from B's service for misconduct. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to contradict the witness's statement as to such dismissal. The evidence is not admissible.

(c.) In an action against A for goods sold to him by B, a witness for B deposes that he saw the goods sold and delivered. He is asked whether he had not given a different account of the transaction. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had given such different account. This evidence is admissible. He is asked whether he had not, after the date of the alleged sale, dealt with B as the owner of the goods. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had so dealt with B. This evidence is admissible. He is asked whether he had not given a false account of another transaction not in issue in the cause. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had given such false account. This evidence is not admissible.

(d.) The witness is asked whether he had not received money or a promise of some favour from B to induce him to give his evidence. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had received such money or promise. This evidence is admissible.

33. A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing, or reduced into writing, relative to the subject-matter of the cause, without such writing being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing, his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him. The Court may, however, at any time during the trial, require the production of the writing for its inspection, and may thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as may seem fit.

34. A witness may while under examination refer to any writing made by himself at the time of the transaction concerning which he is questioned, or so soon afterwards that it may be reasonably presumed that the transaction was fresh in his memory; and he may for the like purpose refer to a writing made by any other person, and read by the witness at the time of such transaction, or so soon afterwards that it may be reasonably presumed that the transaction was fresh in his memory. In such case the writing shall be produced and may be seen by the adverse party, who may, if he choose, cross-examine the witness upon it.

Number of Witnesses.

35. A Court, if satisfied by the evidence given, may in any case act on such evidence, although there may be only the testimony of one witness.

This rule is not rendered inapplicable by the circumstance that the testimony is given in a trial for giving false evidence, or for any offence against the State, or that it is the testimony of an accomplice.

Things of which Judicial Notice is to be taken.

36. The Courts shall take judicial notice of,—

(1).—All Acts, Regulations and Ordinances having the force of law in any part of British India;

(2). All public Acts of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and all local and personal Acts directed by Parliament to be judicially noticed;

(3). The names, titles and functions of the persons filling for the time being any public office in any part of India;

(4.)—All divisions of time, the geographical divisions of the world, the territories under the dominion of the British Crown, the commencement, continuation and termination of hostilities between the British Crown and any other State, and the existence, title and national flag of every sovereign or State recognized by the British Crown.

37. Every Court shall take judicial notice of the names of its own Members and Officers and of their deputies and subordinate Officers or Assistants, and also of all Officers acting in execution of its process, and of all Advocates, Attorneys, Proctors, Vakeels, Pleaders, and other persons authorized by law to act before it.

Sources of Information to which Courts may refer.

38. A Court may, in order to inform itself in respect of any of the matters mentioned in sections 36 and 37 of this Act, and also on matters of public history, literature, science, or art, refer, for the purposes of evidence, to such books, maps, almanacks, or charts as the Court shall consider to be of authority on the subject to which they relate.

Saving of Registration law.

39. The foregoing Rules are to take effect subject to the provisions of the law for the time being in force regarding the registration of any document.

Repeal of Acts.

40. Act No. XIX of 1853 (to amend the Law of Evidence in the Civil Courts of the East India Company in the Bengal Presidency), section 19, and Act No. II of 1855 (for the further improvement of the Law of Evidence) are hereby repealed.

Short title.

41. This Act may be called "The Indian Evidence Act."

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

THE present Bill is comprised in the fifth report which the Commissioners appointed to prepare a body of substantive law for India have recently submitted to Her Majesty. The remarks which the Commissioners have prefixed to their draft follow this statement, and will be found to give full information as to the object of the Bill, and the reasons for the changes which it proposes to introduce.

H. S. MAINE.

SIMLA,
22nd October 1868.

REPORT.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

WE, Your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to prepare a body of substantive law for India, now humbly submit to Your Majesty rules of law which we have prepared on the subject of evidence.

India does not at present possess an uniform law upon this subject. Within the Presidency towns the English law of evidence is in force, modified by certain Acts of the Indian Legislature, of which Act II of 1855 is the most important.

This Act contains many valuable provisions. It extends the range of judicial notice, and facilitates the proof of documents, of foreign systems of law, and of matters of public history. It removes incompetency to testify by reason of interest or relationship; renders parties to suits liable to be called as witnesses, and makes husband and wife competent witnesses for or against each other in civil proceedings; renders dying declarations admissible, though the declarant may have entertained hopes of recovery; provides that witnesses may be cross-examined by the party who called them, and that they shall not be excused from answering questions because they may thereby criminate themselves. Declarations which were against the pecuniary interest of the persons who made them, and entries according to the usual course of business, both of which kinds of evidence the English law admits only in case of death, are under this Act admissible if the person who made the declaration or the entry has become incapable of giving evidence or if his testimony cannot be procured. The Act also gives to books regularly kept, and to certain commercial documents the character of corroborative though not of independent evidence, and makes entries in such books independent evidence of certain formal matters; it extends the class of persons whose declarations are admissible in case of pedigree, and provides in effect that mistakes committed in the rejection or reception of evidence shall not lead to a new trial or to the reversal of a decision unless a substantial failure of justice has been caused thereby. The Act, however, bears reference in many places to the existing law, and it appears to have been designed, not as a complete body of rules, but as supplementary to and corrective of the English law, and also of the customary law of evidence prevailing in those parts of British India where the English law is not administered.

This customary law has not assumed any definite form; the Mahommedan law, since the enactment of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, has ceased to have any validity in the country courts, even in criminal matters; and those courts have in fact no fixed rules of evidence except those contained in Act II of 1855. They are not required to follow the English law as such, although they are not debarred from following it where they regard it as the most equitable.

In laying down uniform rules for the guidance of the Indian judges in general, as well in the Courts just mentioned as in those in which the English law of evidence has hitherto prevailed, we do not think that it would be advisable to adopt a system so artificial as that which has grown up in this country.

The English practice has been moulded in a great degree by our social and legal institutions and our forms of procedure; and much of it is admitted to be unsuited to the various states of society and the different forms of property which are to be met with in India.

In England the aim has been to avoid presenting to the consideration of the jury whatever it was thought could not safely be presented to an unprofessional tribunal. In order to obtain this end, various kinds of evidence, which were deemed little worthy of credit, were pronounced inadmissible, and a great deal of evidence which, if duly weighed and dispassionately considered, would tend to the elucidation of truth, is absolutely excluded. On the other hand, evidence is admitted which is at least as dangerous as that which is shut out. Thus parent and child cannot refuse to bear testimony for or against each other in criminal cases, while a wife cannot be asked a question on the trial of her husband, unless the trial be for an offence committed against herself. In matrimonial cases the inconsistencies of the law as to the competency of the married persons to give evidence cause frequent embarrassment, and even occasional failure of justice.

In a country like India, where the task of judicial investigation is attended with peculiar difficulties, and where it is the duty of the judge in all civil and in some criminal cases, to decide without a jury, there is greater danger of miscarriage from the mind of the court being uninformed than from its being unduly influenced by the information laid before it. It seems, therefore, better to afford every facility for the admission of truth, although with some risk that falsehood or error may be mixed with it, than to narrow, with a view to the exclusion of falsehood, the channels by which truth is admitted. It is of course impossible to admit all evidence that may be offered, for this would lead to excessive waste of time, but we have provided that all relevant evidence not expressly excluded by our rules shall be admissible, and that except in those few cases where the law itself attaches a special importance or effect to particular evidence, the court shall decide for itself whether any weight, and what weight, shall be assigned to each piece of evidence that is submitted to it. The judge must, of course, form his own opinion regarding the relevancy of any evidence which the parties may desire to submit to him, but it is often difficult, especially in the early stage of a trial, to show the exact bearing of each piece of evidence upon the issues. It is by no means our desire that our rules should be understood as imposing upon the judges the use of excessive strictness in excluding evidence of which the applicability cannot be fully shown at the moment when the evidence is tendered. We have, however, inserted provisions intended to guard against the trial of collateral issues arising out of questions asked with a view to impugn the credit of witnesses.

It will be seen that we have discarded, for the most part, the rules which limit the discretion of the Court in drawing its conclusions from the whole of the evidence. While we do not interfere with those provisions of the Act for the registration of assurances or of the Code of Criminal Procedure which recognize certain things as primâ facie evidence, that is to say, as conclusive unless met by counter-evidence; yet we do not by our own rules attach this character to evidence of any class, nor,—except where the testimony of a witness has been attacked,—do we recognize anything as corroborative though not independent evidence. We have provided that a Court may act upon the testimony of a single witness, even in the case of the gravest offences against the State, or of perjury, or of criminal charges supported by the evidence of accomplices alone.

An attempt to define all the cases in which, and the purposes for which, particular evidence may be received, would in our opinion impede instead of aiding the investigation of truth. We hope that the course which we have adopted will render it easier for those who administer the law to avoid the error so often committed in practice where a strict standard of admissibility exists, that of supposing that whatever evidence is admissible comes in some degree accredited to the court.

The exclusion even of relevant evidence may be desirable, when the evidence is such that people are naturally inclined to attach undue importance to it; when it is such as cannot be admitted without the danger of encouraging forgery; or when it is such as cannot be received or at least cannot be extorted, without injury to interests which are even more important than the judicial investigation of truth.

Although we have laid it down generally that all relevant evidence shall be admissible, we have thought it necessary to make certain exceptions from this rule. These exceptions relate chiefly to that kind of evidence which is described in the English books under the title "hearsay." We have, however, abstained from making use of the word "hearsay" from the uncertainty and vagueness of the meaning usually attributed to that word. What a witness says as to what some other person has said or written may be called "hearsay" in one sense of that word, and that the widest or popular sense; but the statements by a witness of what he has heard another person say may be in fact (as in cases of slander) the very matter in issue; or in other cases may be part of the circumstances which it is essential to ascertain. On the other hand, "hearsay" may be defined to be that which a witness does not say as of his own knowledge, but says that another has said or signified to him. This is probably a more strict and accurate definition of the word "hearsay" as used in the English law; but it does not include all that is known in that law as hearsay.

After much considering this subject, we have thought that it would promote a more accurate apprehension of our meaning, and be of more practical utility in the Indian courts, if we were to exclude the word altogether. We have, therefore, without attempting any definition of the word "hearsay," endeavoured to lay down rules for the exclusion of that class of evidence in the cases in which we think it ought to be excluded, and for the admission of it in the cases in which we think it ought to be admitted. We have accordingly gone through the various classes of evidence, in which arises the question of admissibility or exclusion of what is called in the English law "hearsay" and have endeavoured to state the rule applicable to each class.

Most of the rules for the admissibility of this kind of evidence are recognized by the English law, others are in accordance with the Indian Act II. of 1855, above referred to, or are intended to relax the English rules still further than was done by that enactment.

We have, for instance, made admissible in evidence that which has been spoken, written, or otherwise intimated in the ordinary course of business by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured; and we have admitted entries in books kept in the ordinary course of business. We have also made admissible written acknowledgments of the receipt of money, goods, securities, or property of any kind, and documents used in commerce. Declarations which under the English law are only admitted because they have been made against interest will, by the effect of our rules, be excluded, unless they have been made in the ordinary course of business. The test of pecuniary interest is exceedingly difficult of application, and appears to us to be of little value as a test of truth.

We have admitted statements as to matters of reputation and of pedigree made by persons since dead or incapacitated, or whose presence cannot be procured; adding in the case of pedigree a proviso that the person who made the statement shall have had special means of knowledge. We have discarded the condition of the English law which requires that the statement shall have been made before the controversy had arisen, as we think that this circumstance affects rather the weight than the admissibility of the statement.

We have allowed a limited effect, as evidence, to newspaper reports of public meetings.

The indulgence afforded to witnesses by the existing law in permitting them to refer to contemporaneous memoranda appears to us to be carried too far when copies of such memoranda are allowed to be used for the purpose; and our rules do not permit the use of copies.

Another cause of exclusion applies to documentary evidence. Unless some degree of caution were observed with regard to the authentication of writings, great facilities would be afforded for the fabrication of documents. We have, therefore, laid down rules for the evidence to be required of the proper execution of documents, and retaining the distinction between primary and secondary evidence, have provided against the admission of the latter where the former is procurable. We hope that these rules will, in combination with the laws lately passed by the Indian Legislature for the registration of assurances, tend to the improvement of Indian documentary evidence.*

The third case in which we have excluded testimony is, where its admission would be dangerous to the public service, or inconsistent with decency or morality, with the confidence of married life, or with the freedom of intercourse between a client and his legal adviser.

We have provided that questions of a criminatory tendency shall not be asked merely in order to test the credit of a witness.

We have not adopted s. 19 of Act XIX of 1853, which excuses witnesses from producing their own title deeds, a provision which must, under an improved system of registration, become every day less suited to India. Judges will, no doubt, protect witnesses from the production of their title deeds when they are not relevant and material to the cause.

We have not adopted in all respects the doctrines of the English law on the subject of the effect of previous decisions when adduced as evidence.

To those judgments, which are admitted by the laws of all other countries as conclusive evidence not only between the parties but as against strangers, we have affixed the same character in India; in all other cases, we have provided that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction upon a matter directly in issue shall be admissible as evidence between the same parties upon the same matter directly in issue in another cause, but that it shall not be conclusive. As regards strangers, we have provided that it shall be admissible merely as evidence that such judgment was pronounced between the parties.

We have thought that the court will arrive at the truth more accurately if left to draw their inference from the evidence given, than if fettered by rules of presumption, which are, in our opinion, incapable of being laid down so as to be universally applicable.

It may perhaps be made a question how far the subject of evidence falls under the head of substantive law, and some of the sections of the draft now submitted certainly border closely on procedure. Those sections, however, have not found a place in either of the Codes of Procedure. We have, therefore, inserted them (with some modifications), as it appears to us that the Law of Evidence ought not to be left to be gleaned from many different enactments, but that so much of it as is not to be found in the Codes of Procedure should be, as far as possible, comprised in the rules of law now submitted by us, and that the enactments which will thus be rendered unnecessary should be repealed.

We recommend the repeal of so much of Acts II of 1855 and XIX of 1833 as remains unrepealed, except s. 26 of the latter enactment, which does not form part of the Law of Evidence.

SCHEDULE VI.

Enactments repealed.

A Bill for imposing Stamp Duties on certain Instruments.

CHAPTER I.—PRELIMINARY.

Short title.

1. This Act may be called 'The General Stamp Act, 1869.'

Extent of Act.

It extends to the whole of British India.

Commencement of Act.

And it shall come into force on the first day of April, 1869.

Repeal of enactments.

2. From the time at which this Act comes into force, the enactments specified in the sixth schedule hereto annexed shall be repealed to the extent specified in the third column of the same schedule.

Interpretation Clause.

3. In this Act and the Schedules hereto, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context,—

'Affidavit' includes every declaration in writing, on oath or affirmation, made before a person authorised by law to administer an oath:

'Award' includes every decision in writing by an arbitrator or umpire:

'Bill of Exchange' includes a hundí and every other instrument, except a cheque, whereby a person is ordered to pay to another a specified sum of money:

'Bill of Lading' includes every instrument signed by the owner of a ship or his agent, acknowledging the receipt of goods therein described, and undertaking to deliver them at a port and to a person therein mentioned:

'Bond' includes every instrument whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another, on condition that the obligation shall be void if a specified act is performed:

'Bottomry Bond' includes every instrument whereby the master of a sea-going ship borrows money on the security of the ship to enable him to prosecute her voyage:

'Charter-party' includes every instrument (other than an agreement for the hire of a tug-steamer) whereby a ship or some principal part thereof is let for the specified purposes of the charterer:

'Cheque' includes every instrument whereby a bank, banker, or person acting as a banker is ordered to pay on demand a specified sum of money:

'Collector' means Collector of a District, and includes Deputy Commissioner or any officer having jurisdiction equivalent to that of a Collector of a District:

'Composition-deed' includes every instrument executed by a debtor, whereby the debtor conveys his property for the benefit of his creditors, or whereby payment of a composition or dividend on their debts is secured to the creditors, or whereby provision is made for the continuance of the debtor's business, under the supervision of inspectors or under letters of license, for the benefit of his creditors:

'Conveyance' means any instrument, except a settlement, mortgage-deed, or lease, by which property is transferred inter vivos:

'Counterpart' means the duplicate of a conveyance, settlement, mortgage-deed or lease, such duplicate not being executed by the grantor, settlor, mortgagor or lessor, but by some other party to the instrument: it includes a kabúliyát:

'Delivery-order' includes every instrument entitling or intended to entitle any person therein named, or his assigns, or the holder thereof, to the delivery of any goods of the value of twenty rupees or upwards lying in or upon any dock, port, warehouse or wharf, such instrument being signed by or on behalf of the owner of such goods upon the sale or transfer of the property therein:

'Dock-warrant' includes every instrument evidencing the title of any person therein named or his assign, or the holder thereof, to the property in any goods lying in or upon any dock, warehouse or wharf, such instrument being signed or certified by or on behalf of the company or person in whose custody such goods may be:

'Lease' includes every instrument by which one person lets, or agrees to let, immoveable property to another for a specified term:

'Letter of Credit' includes every instrument by which one person requests another to give credit to the person in whose favour it is drawn:

'Letter of License' includes every agreement between a debtor and his creditors that the latter shall, for a specified time, suspend their claims and allow the debtor to carry on business at his own discretion:

'Mortgage-deed' includes every instrument evidencing a pledge of property for securing the payment of money:

'Negotiable Instrument' includes Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes and Cheques:

'Notarial act' means any instrument made or signed by a Notary Public in the execution of the duties of his office, and includes every like instrument made or signed by a consul, attorney, or other person authorized by law to act as a Notary Public:

'Paper' includes vellum, parchment or any other material on which an instrument may be written:

'Partition-deed' means any instrument whereby persons interested in property jointly, or in common, or as co-parceners, or as members of an undivided Hindú family, divide or agree to divide such property in severalty, and includes a batwárá:

'Policy of Insurance' means any instrument by which one person, in consideration of a premium, engages to indemnify another against loss, damage or liability arising from an unknown or contingent event, and includes a policy on life:

'Power of Attorney' includes every instrument empowering a person to act in the stead of the person executing it:

'Promissory Note' includes every instrument whereby the maker engages absolutely to pay a specified sum of money to another at a time therein limited, or on demand, or at sight:

'Protest' means a declaration in writing made by a Notary Public, or other person authorized to act as such, attesting the dishonour of a Bill of Exchange or Promissory Note:

'Protest of the Master of a Ship' includes every declaration of the particulars of her voyage, drawn up by him with a view to the adjustment of losses, or the calculation of averages, and every declaration in writing made by him against the charterers or the consignees for not loading or unloading the ship:

'Proxy' means an instrument whereby a person authorizes another to vote for him at a meeting:

'Release' includes every instrument whereby a person renounces a claim upon another person, or against any specified property:

'Respondentia bond' includes every instrument securing a loan on the cargo laden or to be laden on board a ship, and making repayment contingent on the arrival of the cargo at the port of destination:

'Schedule' includes every list or inventory separate and distinct from an instrument and therein referred to as part thereof or as material thereto; but does not include any public map, plan, survey or award; and

'Settlement' means any instrument (other than a Will) whereby the destination or devolution of moveable or immoveable property is settled or agreed to be settled.

CHAPTER II.—STAMP DUTIES CHARGEABLE UNDER THIS ACT.

Scheduled duties chargeable.

4. For every instrument mentioned in the Schedules hereto annexed and executed in British India after this Act comes into force, or executed out of British India after this Act comes into force, but relating to any property within British India, or executed out of British India, whether before or after this Act comes into force, but in any manner becoming obligatory therein after this Act comes into force, there shall be payable to Government, as stamp duty, the amount indicated in any schedule hereto annexed, to be the proper duty for such instrument.

Duties how levied.

5 The duty so chargeable shall be levied,—

By adhesive stamps.

(a)—On the several instruments specified in Schedule I to this Act,—by means of adhesive stamps to be affixed to such instruments subject to the conditions hereinafter mentioned:

Provided that the duties chargeable on bills of exchange, bills of lading, cheques, and such other of the said instruments as the Governor General of India in Council, by notification in the Gazette of India, from time to time directs, may be denoted by stamps impressed on the paper whereon such instruments are written, and the Collector shall, on receiving payment of the full amount of the stamps required to be impressed on the forms hereinafter mentioned, cause all blank forms of such instruments, which may be brought to him for the purpose, to be stamped accordingly.

By impressed stamps.

(b.)—On the several instruments specified in Schedules II, III, and IV to this Act,—by means of bi-coloured stamps to be impressed on the paper whereon the instruments are written in such manner as the said Governor General may from time to time direct.

Duties by whom payable.

6. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the expense of providing the necessary stamp in the following cases shall be borne—

1st.—In the case of any instrument specified in Schedules I and II to this Act, other than a policy of insurance, a settlement, a mortgage-deed, a lease or a counterpart of a lease, by the person drawing, making or executing such instrument:

2nd.—In the case of a policy of insurance, by the insured:

3rd.—In the case of a settlement, by the settlor:

4th.—In the case of a conveyance, mortgage-deed or lease, by the grantee, mortgagee or lessee:

5th.—In the case of a counterpart of a lease, by the lessor; and

Duties on Bills of Exchange.

7. The duty imposed by this Act on bills of exchange shall be chargeable (a) on all bills drawn and payable in British India, (b) on all bills drawn in, but payable out of, British India, and (c) on all bills drawn out of, but accepted, or paid, or endorsed, transferred, or otherwise negotiated within British India.

Bills drawn in sets.

8. When a bill of exchange is drawn within British India in a set of two or more parts, the stamp required by this Act shall be affixed to, or impressed on, the first part, and each of the other parts shall on being brought to the Collector, and on proof to his satisfaction of the first part having been duly stamped, be stamped by him with the words "Duty paid."

Bill drawn out of British India.

9. The holder of any bill of exchange drawn out of British India, and not stamped as required by this Act shall, before he presents the same for acceptance or for payment, or endorses, transfers, or otherwise negotiates such bill, affix thereto a proper adhesive stamp for denoting the duty with which such bill is chargeable under this Act.

Bill, note or bond reserving interest.

10. Where interest is expressly made payable by the terms of a bill of exchange, promissory note or bond, the instrument shall not be chargeable with a duty higher than that with which it would have been chargeable had no mention of interest been made therein.

Stamp duty on instruments of a double character.

11. When any instrument is drawn or made in such form as to come under two or more denominations of instruments chargeable with different rates of stamp duty under this Act, the instrument shall be charged with the highest of such rates.

Optional stamps where value of subject-matter is indeterminate.

12. When the amount or value of the subject-matter of any instrument chargeable under this Act and referred to or mentioned in section six cannot be ascertained, the proper stamp to be borne by such instrument may be determined by the person bound under that section to provide the stamp:

Provided that under such instrument nothing shall be recoverable more than the highest amount or value for which, if stated in an instrument of the same denomination, the stamp actually used under such option would have been sufficient; and no such instrument shall be valid in respect of any amount or value exceeding that for which such stamp would be sufficient.

Bond, &c., for payment of annuity.

13. The whole amount secured by a bond, promissory note or mortgage-deed for the payment of an annuity shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be ten times the amount of the annual payment.

Several instruments used in a single transaction.

14. Where more instruments than one are required for the completion of any transaction involving the execution of any conveyance, settlement, mortgage-deed or lease, the proper stamp required by this Act for such conveyance, settlement, mortgage-deed or lease, shall be borne by the principal instrument executed in such transaction, and each of the other instruments shall bear the stamp specified in Schedule IV to this Act as applicable to a collateral instrument.

And where of several instruments, a doubt shall arise which is the principal, it shall be lawful for the parties to determine for themselves which for the purposes of this section shall be so deemed to be the principal instrument.

Instruments exempt from duty.

15. Nothing in this Act shall render the following instruments chargeable with duty:—

(1.) Receipt or discharge granted to an actual cultivator for the rent of land paying revenue to Government.

(2.) Receipt or discharge written upon any negotiable instrument duly stamped according to the laws in force in British India at the date thereof.

(3.) Receipt given for money or securities for money deposited in any Bank or in the hands of any Banker or person acting as a Banker to be accounted for:

Provided the same be not expressed to be received of or by the hands of any other than the person to whom the same is to be accounted for:

Provided further, that this exemption shall not extend to a receipt or acknowledgment for any sum paid or deposited for, or upon a letter of allotment of a share in respect of a call upon any scrip or share of or in any Company or Association or proposed or intended Company or Association.

(4.) Receipt or discharge endorsed or otherwise written upon or contained in any bond, mortgage-deed or other security, or any conveyance or instrument whatever duly stamped according to the laws in force in British India at the date thereof, acknowledging the receipt of the consideration money therein expressed, or the receipt of any principal money, interest or annuity thereby secured.

(5.) Document given by an inland carrier acknowledging the receipt of goods conveyed by such carrier.

(6.) Transfer by endorsement of a negotiable instrument or a policy of marine insurance or of insurance against fire.

(7.) Bond to Government for the due performance of the duties of any office of which the salary does not exceed ten Rupees.

(8.) Agreement or memorandum of an agreement for or relating to the sale of goods or merchandize.

(9.) Lease granted to an actual cultivator, unless a fine or premium be paid in consideration of such lease.

(10.) Counterpart of such lease.

(11.) Surrender of land executed by an actual cultivator to his landlord.

(12.) Affidavit made for the sole purpose of enabling any person to receive any pension or charitable allowance.

(13.) Copy of any paper which a public officer is by law required to make for urnish in his official capacity.

CHAPTER III.—Unstamped or Insufficiently Stamped Documents.

Instruments not duly stamped inadmissible in evidence.

16. No instrument chargeable with stamp duty under this Act shall be received in any court of justice, or by any person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence, as creating, modifying, transferring, or extinguishing, or purporting to create, modify, transfer or extinguish, any right or obligation, or as evidence in any civil proceeding, or shall be acted upon in any such court, or by any such person as aforesaid, or by any public officer, or shall be registered by any officer acting under any law for the registration of assurances or in any public office, or shall be authenticated by any public officer, unless such instrument bears a stamp of a value not less than the amount of the duty with which it is chargeable under this Act.

Except in criminal proceedings.

Every instrument chargeable with stamp duty shall be admitted in evidence in any criminal proceeding (other than proceedings under Chapter 22 of the Code of Criminal Procedure) although it may not have the stamp required by law impressed thereon or affixed thereto.

Bill unstamped or stamp uncancelled.

17. Subject to the provisions contained in section twenty-four, no person taking or receiving from another a bill of exchange requiring an adhesive stamp under this Act, either in payment or as a security, or by purchase or otherwise, shall be entitled to recover thereon, or to make the same available for any purpose, unless at the time when he so takes or receives such bill, such stamp as aforesaid is affixed thereto and cancelled in manner hereby directed.

Powers of civil courts as to unstamped or insufficiently stamped instruments.

18. When any instrument chargeable with stamp duty under Schedules II, III or IV to this Act, executed on paper not bearing the proper stamp, is produced in a civil court, the court, if satisfied that the omission to execute such instrument on paper bearing the proper stamp, did not arise out of any intention to evade payment of the proper duty payable thereon, and on payment of such duty, or, in the case of an insufficiently stamped instrument, of the sum required to make up the full amount chargeable on such instrument, together with a penalty of the following amount (that is to say) :—

if the instrument is produced within one year from the date of its execution ... ... ten times or, if it is produced after one year from such date ... ... twenty times such proper stamp duty or deficient portion thereof as aforesaid, shall certify by endorsement on such instrument that the proper stamp duty has been levied thereon.

Such certificate shall be conclusive as to the amount of stamp-duty leviable on such instrument, and the said instrument shall thereupon be receivable in evidence as if originally executed on paper bearing the proper stamp.

Registration of penalties levied by civil courts.

19. a. An entry of every such payment showing amount thereof shall be made the in a book to be kept by the Court, and shall also be endorsed on the instrument and signed by the presiding officer,

b. The Court shall at the end of every month make a return to the Collector of the money (if any) which it has so received, distinguishing between the sums received by way of penalty and the sums received by way of duty, stating the number and title of the suit, the name of the party from whom the money was received, and the date (if any) and description of the instrument.

c. The Court shall pay over all money so received to the Collector or to such person as he may from time to time appoint to receive the same.

Impounding unstamped instruments in Courts.

20. If it appear to a civil or criminal court that any instrument filed or exhibited in such court was executed on unstamped or insufficiently stamped paper with the manifest intention of evading payment of the stamp duty prescribed by this Act for such instrument, the Court may impound the instrument and send it to the Collector, and he shall thereupon prosecute the offender.

Impounding unstamped instruments in public office.

21. If any instrument not bearing the stamp prescribed therefor by this Act is produced before any registering officer, or in any public office other than a civil or criminal court, the registering or other public officer shall impound the instrument, and send it forthwith to the Collector.

Powers of Collector as to unstamped or insufficiently stamped instruments.

22. a. When any such instrument has been so sent or brought before the Collector, otherwise than for the purpose of obtaining an adjudication thereon, as hereinafter provided, he shall either proceed in accordance with the provisions of Section eighteen, exercising the powers thereby conferred on a civil court; or if it appear that the instrument was executed on unstamped, or insufficiently stamped, paper with the manifest intention of evading payment of the proper stamp duty, the Collector shall prosecute all the persons that have executed the said instrument or such of them as to him may seem fit:

Prosecution.

b. Provided that in any case coming under this section, if where the instrument has been brought within one year from the date of its execution to the Collector or other public officer, by whom it has been sent to the Collector under section twenty-one, and if the Collector is satisfied that the omission or neglect to execute such instrument on paper bearing the proper stamp arose solely from urgent necessity or unavoidable accident, he may remit the penalty prescribed by section eighteen:

Remission of penalty.

c. Provided also that in any case coming under this section in which an instrument, other than a bill of exchange, purports to have been executed out of British India, if the Collector is satisfied that the instrument was so executed, and also that it has been brought to him within the two months next after its arrival in British India, he shall, on payment of the duty with which such instrument would have been chargeable if executed in British India, certify by indorsement thereon that the proper stamp duty has been levied upon it.

d. Such certificate shall be conclusive as to the amount of stamp duty leviable on the instrument, which shall thereupon be receivable in evidence as if originally executed on paper bearing the proper stamp.

Validity of instrument for which collector levies penalty.

23. When the Collector elects to proceed under section eighteen, he shall, after endorsing on the instrument the certificate thereby directed, return such instrument to the registering or other public officer by whom it was sent or to the person by whom it was produced, and the said instrument shall thereupon be, and be deemed to have been, as valid as if it was originally executed on paper bearing the proper stamp.

Power to stamp instruments chargeable with one anna.

24. a. When any bill, cheque or order for the payment of money on demand, or any receipt, chargeable with the stamp duty of one anna comes to the hand of any person unstamped, he may affix thereto the necessary adhesive stamp, and cancel the same in the manner required by this Act, and upon so doing, may charge the duty against the person who ought to have paid the same, or deduct such duty from the sum so directed to be paid.

b. Such bill, cheque, order or receipt shall, so far as relates to the stamp duty chargeable thereon, be valid; but this shall not relieve any person from the liability to the penalty which he may have incurred by issuing or giving the said bill, cheque, order or receipt unstamped.

Procedure where receipts are required.

25. a. Any person, or the agent of any person, from whom money or goods exceeding in amount or value twenty Rupees is or are due or claimed to be due, and who shall have paid such money, or delivered such goods, may provide a piece of paper with an adhesive stamp of one anna affixed thereto, and may require of the person entitled to such money or goods, or any agent to whom the same shall have been paid or delivered, a receipt for such money or goods and also the value of the said stamp.

b. If any person to whom money or goods shall have been so paid or delivered refuses to give such receipt upon demand thereof, or to pay the value of the said stamp thereon, he shall be liable for every such offence to a fine of one hundred rupees.

Refusal to give receipts.

26. Except as provided in section twenty-four, no stamp shall be affixed to, or impressed on, any instrument specified in Schedule I to this Act, subsequent to the execution thereof, nor shall the provisions of sections eighteen and twenty-two apply to any such instrument.

After-stamping when inadmissible.

CHAPTER IV.—Criminal Penalties.

27. Whoever makes, signs or issues or, except as provided in section twenty-three, accepts, endorses, transfers, pays or receives payment of any bill of exchange, promissory note, cheque or other similar instrument liable to any of the duties hereby imposed without the same being duly stamped,

Penalty for executing instrument on paper not duly stamped.

and whoever makes, executes, or signs any other instrument liable to any of such duties without the same being duly stamped, shall, for every such instrument, be liable to fine not exceeding one hundred rupees, or if ten times the value of the proper stamp or, in case an insufficient stamp has been used, ten times the deficient amount thereof, exceeds Rupees one hundred, then to fine not exceeding ten times such value or deficient amount.

28. Whoever presents for acceptance or for payment, or accepts, pays or endorses, transfers, or in any manner negotiates any such bill as aforesaid, whereon there is not such adhesive stamp as aforesaid duly affixed, shall be liable to the penalty prescribed by section twenty-seven.

Penalty for presenting, &c., unstamped bills of exchange.

29. Whoever presents for acceptance or payment a bill of exchange to which an adhesive stamp has been affixed under Section nine, and whoever endorses, transfers, or in any manner negotiates such bill, shall, before delivering the same out of his hands, custody or power, cancel the stamp so affixed, by writing thereon his name or the initial letters thereof or the name of his firm, and the day and year on which he so writes the same or by affixing thereon or across the same, the seal or mark which he is in the habit of using, in such manner as to show that the stamp has been made use of, and so that the same shall not admit of being used again.

Cancelling stamps on bills by holder.

And whoever ought, as directed by this Act to cancel such stamp in manner aforesaid, and refuses or neglects so to do, shall be liable to the penalty prescribed in section twenty-seven.

Penalty for failure to cancel such stamps.

30. Whoever, in order to evade the payment of the duty prescribed by this Act for such instrument, makes and issues any bill of exchange bearing a date subsequent to the date on which it is issued, and whoever knowing that such bill has been so post-dated, takes or receives such bill, or accepts, pays, endorses, transfers or in any manner negotiates the same, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

Penalty for post-dating bills of exchange.

31. Whenever an adhesive stamp is used as hereinbefore authorized, the person making or executing the instrument to which such stamp is affixed shall, before delivering the instrument out of his hands, custody or power, cancel the stamp so used by writing thereon his name or the initial letters thereof, or the name of his firm, and the date on which such instrument is made or executed, so that such stamp shall not admit of being used again.

Cancellation of adhesive stamp by maker or executant.

Whoever makes or signs any instrument with an adhesive stamp thereon when an adhesive stamp is allowed to be used, and does not bonâ fide in manner aforesaid cancel such stamp, shall be liable to fine not exceeding one hundred Rupees.

Penalty for not cancelling stamp.

32*a*. When any moveable or immoveable property is sold, the full consideration-money directly or indirectly paid or secured, or agreed to be paid for the same, shall be truly set forth in words at length in the principal or only instrument whereby the property sold is conveyed to, or vested in, the purchaser or in any other person by his direction.

Consideration to be stated.

b. When any property is sold and conveyed subject to any mortgage or bond or other debt, or to any gross or entire sum of money, such debt or sum shall be deemed the consideration-money or part of the consideration money (as the case may be) in respect whereof the duty chargeable under Schedule III to this Act shall be paid, notwithstanding the purchaser is not or does not become personally liable for such debt or sum, or does not agree to pay the same or to indemnify the purchaser against the same.

Mortgage-money to be deemed purchase-money.

c. If the full consideration-money is not set forth as aforesaid, the purchaser and the seller shall each be liable to fine not exceeding five hundred Rupees, and shall also pay a fine of five times the amount of the excess of duty with which such instrument would have been chargeable under this Act, if the full consideration-money had been duly set forth in such instrument in addition to the duty actually paid for the same.

Penalty for not stating consideration.

33. Any attorney, vakeel, pleader, mukhtár or other person employed in or about the preparing of any instrument in or upon which the full consideration-money is hereby required to be truly set forth, Penalty on attorneys, &c., not inserting true consideration.

or employed for any of the parties thereto in anywise about or relating to the transaction therein mentioned, who inserts or sets forth, or causes to be inserted or set forth, in or upon any such instrument any other than the full consideration money, or abets, within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code, the doing thereof respectively, shall, for every such offence, pay a fine not less than Rupees five hundred and not exceeding Rupees five thousand.

Every attorney, vakeel, pleader, or mukhtár convicted under this section shall from the date of such conviction be disabled to practise as an attorney, vakeel, pleader, or mukhtár.

Provided that no person shall be liable to any penalty or disability under this section, unless the duty actually paid for the instrument is less than would have been payable for the same in case the consideration-money had been truly set forth as aforesaid.

Recovery of fines.

34. All fines imposed under this Act may be recovered, if for offences committed outside the local limits of the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, in the manner prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure, and if for offences committed within those limits, in the manner prescribed by any Act regulating the Police of such towns in force for the time being.

Reward to informers.

35. Whenever an offender is sentenced to pay a fine under this Act, the convicting Magistrate may award any portion not exceeding one half to the person on whose information the offender has been convicted.

HAPTER V.—JURISDICTION.

Adjudication of doubt as to proper stamp.

36. When any instrument chargeable with stamp duty under this Act, whether previously stamped or not, is presented to the Collector, and the person presenting it desires to have the opinion of that officer as to the duty with which it is so chargeable, and pays a fee of five rupees, the Collector shall assess and charge the duty to which, in his judgment, the instrument is liable; and upon payment of such duty or of such a sum as, with the duty already paid thereon, is equal to the duty so assessed and charged, and of the penalty, if any, incurred through the instrument having been executed on insufficiently stamped paper, shall certify by endorsement on such instrument, that the full duty with which it is chargeable under this Act has been paid.

The instrument shall thereupon be deemed to be duly stamped and receivable in evidence or otherwise in all courts and public offices:

Provided that nothing contained in the former part of this section shall authorize the Collector to make any such endorsement on an instrument comprised in Schedule I to this Act, and presented on unstamped or insufficiently stamped paper subsequent to the execution thereof.

Appeal against Collector's decision.

37. If the person presenting any such instrument, is dissatisfied with the judgment of the Collector, he may, upon paying the duty assessed by such judgment, including the penalty, if any, which would be leviable under section twenty-two if the instrument were produced in a civil court, and upon depositing twenty rupees for costs and charges, require the Collector to state specially and sign the case on which the question arose, together with his judgment thereon, and the Collector shall state and sign such case accordingly, and deliver it to the person making such requisition in order that he may appeal to the High Court.

And upon the application of the appellant (such notice as the High Court shall by any general rule direct being given to the Government pleader) the High Court shall hear the appeal and decide as to the stamp duty with which the instrument is chargeable under this Act, and award the costs (if any) payable by the appellant; and according to such decision the duty and penalty, if any, shall be deemed to have been payable.

If no excess of duty or penalty has been paid under the Collector's judgment, the amount deposited by the appellant shall be paid to Government, but if any such excess has been paid, the same, together with the amount of the deposit, shall be re-paid to the appellant.

And if the sum paid for duty or penalty falls short of what, according to the decision of the High Court, ought to have been paid, the deficiency of duty, or penalty, or both, shall be paid by the appellant, and the Collector may enforce the payment thereof accordingly as if it were arrears of land revenue.

Revision of Collector's orders.

38. All orders of the Collector under this Act, except such as are passed under Section thirty-six, shall be open to revision on appeal or otherwise by the chief controlling revenue authority to which the Collector is subordinate.

Reference to High Court.

39. The chief controlling revenue authority may refer to the High Court any question arising in a case coming before such authority on appeal or otherwise as to the proper stamp prescribed by this Act for any instrument, stating specially the case on which the question arose.

Cases so referred shall be heard by three Judges of the High Court and shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority of such Judges, and such decision shall be final as to the duty to be charged on such instrument.

Power to remit or mitigate penalties.

40. The chief controlling revenue authority may, upon petition, remit or mitigate any penalty imposed under this Act.

Institution of prosecutions.

41. All prosecutions in respect of any offence punishable by this Act, shall be instituted by the Collector of the District, or such other officer as the Local Government specially authorizes in that behalf.

Jurisdiction of Magistrate.

42. Offences punishable under this Act may be tried by any Magistrate who would, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, have jurisdiction to try offences for which penalties corresponding with those hereinbefore provided are provided by the Indian Penal Code.

CHAPTER VI.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Refund in case of useless or spoiled stamped paper.

43. If any person who has obtained any stamped paper in the manner allowed by this Act or Act No. X of 1862 (to consolidate and amend the Law relating to Stamp Duties), does not require the same for use, or if the paper so obtained becomes spoiled or unfit for use as hereinafter mentioned, the Collector of the District in which the paper has been purchased may, upon application made to him within one year after such purchase, and upon delivery to him of such paper, refund the amount actually paid for the same, or in case the owner of the paper so spoiled or unfit for use, desires to be supplied with stamped paper of similar or equal value, the Collector may cause such paper to be delivered to him or his agent upon payment of the value of the paper on which the new stamp or stamps shall be impressed.

When stamped paper shall be held to be spoiled.

44. Stamped paper shall be held to be spoiled or unfit for use within the meaning of section forty-three when—

By accident happening to the same before any writing thereupon has been finally signed and executed, it is rendered unfit for use;

Or when, because of some error in the drawing up or copying of any writing thereon discovered before such writing has been finally signed and executed, it is rendered of no avail;

Or when, by reason of death or refusal of the party whose signature may be necessary to effect the transaction intended by such writing, it remains incomplete and of no avail;

Or when, by refusal of any office or trust granted by a writing thereon, it has failed of the purpose intended;

Or when, by reason of failure of consideration, the transaction intended to be effected or evidenced by a writing thereon cannot be effected or evidenced;

Or when the transaction intended to be effected by a writing thereon has been effected by some other instrument duly stamped;

Or when, in the case of a negotiable instrument, such instrument is, by reason of non-delivery to the payee or person acting in his behalf, or other cause, never brought into use;

Or when, in the case of a bill of exchange other than a bill drawn in a set, it has not been presented for acceptance.

Suit where consideration is not stated.

45. Where in case of a sale, or an exchange upon which money is paid for equality of exchange, or a lease for a premium, the full consideration-money is not truly set forth in the manner hereby directed, it shall be lawful for the purchaser, or the person paying money for equality of exchange, or the lessee (as the case may be), or his representative in interest to sue for and recover back from the seller, or the person receiving such money, or the lessor (as the case may be), or his representative in interest, so much of the consideration-money as is not set forth as aforesaid, or the whole thereof, if no part of the same is so set forth; and in such suit, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, the conveyance, instrument of exchange, or lease shall be receivable in evidence.

Power to make rules for sale of stamps.

46. Every Local Government shall frame rules for regulating the sale of stamps and stamped paper required by this Act, for determining the persons by whom such sale is to be conducted, and for fixing the remuneration of such persons within the territories subject to its control; and may from time to time alter and add to such rules.

Such rules, alterations and additions shall, when approved by the Governor General of India in Council, and after publication in the local official Gazette, have the force of law.

Supply of stamps and stamped paper.

47. Every Local Government shall cause a sufficient supply of adhesive stamps and stamped papers of the several denominations specified in Schedule V to this Act to be provided and kept for sale at all convenient places within the territories subject to its control.

Employment of single stamp.

48. The amount of any stamp required by this Act shall be denoted by a single stamp, except when such amount exceeds one thousand rupees, in which case it may be denoted by two or more stamps, the aggregate amount of which shall be the amount so required:

Provided that where a single stamped paper of any amount less than one thousand rupees is not procurable on application to the proper officer, it shall be lawful, on such officer making a certificate to that effect, for the person requiring such stamp to denote the amount by two or more stamps, the aggregate amount of which shall be the amount so required.

Employment of several stamped papers.

49. When more stamped papers than one are used, under the former part of section forty-eight, for an instrument chargeable with stamp duty under this Act, each stamped paper so used shall contain a part of the instrument.

Act to be translated, indexed and sold cheaply.

50. Every Local Government shall cause this Act and the schedules hereto annexed to be carefully translated into the principal vernacular languages of the territories subject to its control. A full alphabetical index shall be added to every such translation, and the translation and index shall be printed and sold to the public at a price not exceeding four annas per copy.

to such distant authority, this provision is practically inoperative. The Bill proposes to make the Collector the adjudicating authority, to reduce the fee to Rs. 5, and to allow an appeal or reference to the High Court from the decision of the Collector on the further payment of a fee of Rs. 20—to be refunded to the appellant in the event of the Collector's decision being reversed. The procedure will thus be assimilated to that obtaining under the English law.

The Civil penalty leviable under Act X of 1862, for the validation of an instrument executed on unstamped or insufficiently stamped paper, varies greatly according to the time which may have elapsed from the execution of such instrument until it is brought to the Collector; whilst the period within which the penalty may be remitted on the ground of unavoidable accident, is practically unlimited. Such distinctions are purely arbitrary, and not recognized by the English law. The only limit which the English law prescribes as to after-stamping is in regard to instruments executed through any unavoidable cause on paper not bearing the proper stamp. Any such instruments, to obtain a remission of the penalty incurred, must be brought to the Revenue Officer within one year from the date of their execution. Following this course, the Bill provides for the remission of the penalty in such cases, when the unstamped instrument is brought to the Collector or (to any other public officer by whom it is transmitted to the Collector) within one year from the date of its execution, and in all other cases constitutes that period the sole ground of distinction in regard to the amount of fine to be levied: the penalty on instruments brought within one year, being fixed at ten times, and if brought after that period, at twenty times, the deficient amount of stamp duty chargeable thereon.

The provisions of Section 29, Act X of 1862, in regard to the cost of the stamp on certain instruments have been extended. The obligation of bearing the expense of supplying the stamp is fixed by the Bill, in the case of all instruments specified in the first, second, and third schedules, in accordance with the English practice on this subject.

The appellate jurisdiction of the chief controlling revenue authority is extended by the Bill to the revision of all orders passed by the Collector. With the view of obtaining from time to time an authoritative construction of the law for the guidance of the courts and public officers concerned in its administration, the Bill also provides for references being made to the High Court by the chief controlling revenue authority.

In lieu of the existing provisions of the law regarding the sale of stamps, the Bill proposes to invest the Local Governments with the power of framing rules for the regulation of such sale. It is almost impossible to devise a single set of rules suitable to the circumstances of all the provinces of British India, and separate systems adapted to the provinces subject to each Local Government, are better calculated to have successful operation.

The Bill proposes to impose fixed stamp duties of small amount on certain instruments which are stamped under the English law, but have hitherto escaped the impost when executed in this country. It provides also for the reduction of the stamp duty now charged on instruments evidencing the gift or exchange of immoveable property, and the re-conveyance of mortgaged property, or the release of an equity of redemption, instruments of co-partnership, proxies and copies of documents; and it slightly enhances the rates on bills of exchange of large amount, and the fixed duty on a general power-of-attorney.

It further imposes penalties on a legal practitioner who inserts in a conveyance an amount of consideration less than that actually given. This provision is in modification of the second clause of section 51, Act X of 1862, and in accordance with the English law on the subject.

In accordance also with the provision of the English statute 48 Geo. III, c. 149, s. 24, purchasers are empowered to recover from the vendors any amount paid for the property purchased by them in excess of the amount stated in the instrument of conveyance.

The present Bill relates only to that branch of stamp duties comprised in Schedule A., Act X of 1862. The subject of stamp duties on judicial proceedings, which are of the natured of Court fees, is reserved for separate legislation.

A Bill to facilitate the improvement of land in the North-Western Provinces.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to facilitate the improvement of land in the North-Western Provinces of the Presidency of Fort William; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Preliminary.

Short title.

1. This Act may be called "The Land Improvement (North-Western Provinces) Act, 1869."

Interpretation clause.

2. In this Act—

"Rent" means whatever is payable or deliverable for the use or occupation of land:

"Landlord" means any person entitled to receive rent:

"Tenant" means any person using or occupying land, and liable to pay or deliver rent therefor; and

"Court" means the Court of the Collector of Land Revenue or the Court of any officer authorized by the Local Government to hear cases under this Act.

Extent of Act.

3. This Act extends only to the territories for the time being subject to the government of the Lieutenant Governor of the said Provinces:

Saving of agreements.

And nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect any special agreement which has been, or shall be, made between a landlord and a tenant in regard to any of the matters herein comprised.

Cultivation and Management.

Cultivation and management of holding.

4. Every tenant shall cultivate and manage the land in his occupation in a good and husbandlike manner, according to the custom of the country in reference to lands of a like nature, except so far as such custom is varied by this Act, so that the land shall not be injured or deteriorated, or its annual letting-value diminished.

Planting Trees.

By tenant without right of occupancy.

5. No tenant not having a right of occupancy shall be entitled, without the landlord's previous consent, to plant any timber trees on the land in his occupation.

By tenant with right of occupancy.

6. A tenant having a right of occupancy may plant such trees without the landlord's previous consent. But the rent payable by such tenant for the land so planted shall not be liable to be reduced below the rent which would be payable for such land if it were used for agricultural purposes, and shall be liable to enhancement in the same manner as if the land had continued to be so used.

Suits against Tenants.

Suits for compensation or to eject.

7. A landlord may bring a suit to recover compensation from a tenant for any breach of the rules contained in sections three, four, five and six; or, if the tenant has not a right of occupancy, to eject him from the land in his occupation.

When the plaintiff succeeds in any such suit for ejectment, the Court may, instead of making a decree for ejectment, award to the plaintiff such compensation (to be paid by the defendant) as it thinks fit on account of the breach complained of.

Effect of unsatisfied decree for compensation.

8. If a decree for compensation made under section seven remains unsatisfied for fifteen days or upwards, such decree shall, in regard to the liability of the tenant to have his lease cancelled, or to be ejected from the land in his occupation, have the same effect as if an arrear of rent were due from the tenant in respect of such land.

Tenants' Improvements.

Improvements not to involve cancellation or ejectment.

9. No tenant shall be liable to have his lease cancelled, or to be ejected from the land in his occupation, merely on account of improvements made by him on such land.

Presumption of ownership.

10. No improvements made, whether with or without the landlord's consent, by a tenant on the land in his occupation, shall be deemed to raise any presumption of the tenant's ownership in such land or any part thereof.

Power to make improvements.

11. Any tenant may, with or without the landlord's previous consent, make any such improvements on the land in his occupation as are hereinafter mentioned.

Compensation for Tenants' improvements.

Compensation for tenant's improvements.

12. If the tenant has not a right of occupancy, and his tenancy is determined by effluxion of time, or by the act of the landlord; or, if the tenant has a right of occupancy, and the landlord institutes a suit to eject him from the land in his occupation, or to enhance the rent thereof, the tenant, or his representative, as the case may be, shall be entitled to compensation for the outlay in money or labour, or both, expended in making such improvements by him or the person from whom he has inherited, or whom he represents, within thirty years next before the date of such determination or institution.

"Improvements" defined.

13. The word "improvements," as used in the last preceding section, means works by which the annual letting-value of the land has been, and, at the time of demanding compensation, continues to be, increased, and comprises,—

1st.—The construction of works for the storage of water, for the supply of water for agricultural purposes, for drainage, and for protection against floods; the construction of wells, the reclaiming, clearing and enclosing of waste lands and jungles, and other works of a like nature;

2nd.—The renewal or reconstruction of any of the foregoing works, or such alterations therein or additions thereto as are not required for maintaining the same, and which increase durably their value.

Compensation how made.

14. Such compensation may, at the option of the landlord or his representative, be made,—

(1.)—By payment in money;

(2.)—By the grant of a beneficial lease of the land by the landlord or his representative to the tenant or his representative; or

(3.)—Partly by payment in money, and partly by the grant of such lease as aforesaid.

Bar of claim to compensation.

15. If the landlord grants, and the tenant accepts, a lease of the land in the occupation of the latter for a term not less than thirty years, such lease shall bar any claim by the tenant or his representative in respect of improvements made before the commencement of the term on such land by the tenant or the person from whom he has inherited, or whom he represents.

Effect of offer to continue tenant in his holding.

16. If the landlord gives notice to the tenant in the manner provided by section eighteen, that he is willing that the land in such tenant's occupation shall continue to be held by him or his representative for a term of not less than thirty years, at the annual rent then paid by the tenant, and if, within three months after the service of such notice, the tenant does not give notice, in the manner provided under the same section, of his willingness to accept such lease, he shall be debarred from making any claim for improvements made by him on such land whether before or after the expiration of the said three months.

Notice claiming compensation.

17. When the landlord determines the tenancy of any tenant not having a right of occupancy, or institutes a suit to eject or to enhance the rent of any tenant having a right of occupancy, the tenant or his representative desiring to claim compensation for any improvements, may, within three months after the date of such determination or institution serve upon the landlord in the manner provided in section eighteen, a notice claiming such compensation, and specifying the nature and date of the making of such improvements, and the amount to which he claims to be entitled for such compensation.

Service of notices.

18. On the landlord or the tenant (as the case may be) applying to the Tahsíldár or other officer authorised by the local Government to serve notices under this Act, such officer shall serve any notice mentioned in section sixteen or section seventeen, and the applicant shall pay the costs of service.

The notice shall, if practicable, be served personally on the tenant or the landlord (as the case may be).

But if he cannot be found, service may be made by affixing the notice at his usual place of residence, or if he does not reside in the District wherein the land is situate, at some conspicuous place in the village wherein the land is situate.

Provision for difference as to amount or value of compensation.

19. In case of difference as to the amount or value of the compensation tendered, either party may present an application to the Court, on a paper bearing a stamp of eight annas, stating the matter in dispute and requesting a determination thereof.

On receiving such application, the Court shall cause notice thereof to be served on the other party, and after taking such evidence as the parties or either of them may adduce, and after such further enquiry (if any) as it may deem necessary, determine (as the case may be) the amount of the payment, or the terms of the lease, or both.

In determining such amount or terms, the Court shall take into account any assistance given by the landlord, either directly in money, material or labour, at the time of making such improvements, or indirectly by subsequently allowing the tenant to hold at a rate of rent more favourable than the rate at which he would otherwise have held, and any deterioration or diminution of the value of any part of the land in the occupation of the tenant caused by bad cultivation, or by his neglect or default.

The provisions of Chapter VI (as to reference to arbitration) of the Code of Civil Procedure shall be applicable to the proceedings on every such application, and every such application shall be deemed to be a suit for the purposes of the said chapter, and of section nine of Act No. XXIII of 1861 (to amend Act VIII of 1859).

Retention of land till compensation paid.

20. If at the time when an award of compensation is made under section nineteen, or in case there shall have been no difference between the parties as to the amount of the compensation, at the time at which such amount was agreed upon, the tenant shall be entitled to retain such occupation upon the terms of his tenancy until the amount of such compensation, after deducting therefrom any rent due shall be paid, or secured to his satisfaction.

Procedure.

Procedure.

21. Subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, all suits and applications under this Act shall be regulated by the rules of procedure by which suits and applications relating to the recovery of rent are for the time being regulated in the said Provinces, and all judgments and orders given by the Courts under the Act shall be appealable in accordance with the said rules.

Appeals.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

By a decision of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, dated the 20th July 1867, in the case of Behare Patuck v. Sheobaluk Singh, it has been declared to be the general law of the North-Western Provinces that a tenant, even though he possess a right of occupancy, is liable to ejectment from his holding if he should dig a kachcha well, or plant trees, without the previous consent of the landlord. Although the High Court felt that, in the present state of the law, it could arrive at no other conclusion, it may be presumed, from the terms of its decision, that it had grave doubts in regard to the reasonableness of the law which it was administering. The Court said,—

"The law may or may not be opposed to good policy. The act of digging a well, or planting a tree, does not necessarily imply or assert a proprietary right in the land in which the well is dug, or the tree planted. Whether it is most expedient that the tenant should be encouraged to improve his holding by all means, or that the benefits resulting from certain modes of improvement should be secured to the landlord, or left to his option, may be a question; but it is one which we are not called upon to consider. The Court must recognize the law as it is found to exist, so long as it shall not be superseded by positive law, and must apply it in all cases not governed by local usages or special contract. So also in respect of the penalty incurred by a tenant who is guilty of a breach of contract of the kind which this case brings to our notice, the unwritten law of the country must be our guide. Were we free to legislate on the subject, it might seem to us equitable and expedient to look to the amount of injury actually caused to the landlord by the act complained of, and to grant him relief and compensation, whenever possible, otherwise than by ejectment of the tenant. But it is not contended or proved that any other penalty than forfeiture of his holding for such a breach of contract, is sanctioned by the law of these Provinces."

In another decision dated the 17th of April 1867, in the case of Tej Singh v. Rám Dás, Ganéshi Singh, and Chéd Mal, the High Court, while holding itself bound by the existing law to rule that a tenant with a right of occupancy is liable to ejectment if he plant trees without his landlord's permission, has shown very clearly by its remarks that it considers the law to require amendment. The Court said,—

"Whether it is fairly done in furtherance of the purpose for which he holds the land (that is, its cultivation in the usual manner of the country), or so as in no way to detract from that purpose, would seem to be within the ryot's power. We should have been inclined to hold that the planting of trees without the landlord's consent on an in considerable portion of the holding, and to such a limited extent as not to withdraw from cultivation any substantial part of the land, was not an act beyond the ryot's power, or if strictly beyond his power, that it was not an act to be followed by a forfeiture of the whole holding."

The Board of Revenue, North-Western Provinces, has stated its apprehensions that the effect of the law which has been declared by the High Court, in the first of the decisions just noticed, may "in many districts place the cultivator at the mercy of the zamíndárs, as, in some parts of these Provinces, the annual sinking of a kachcha well is believed to be as essential to the production of a crop as the cultivation of the ground by the plough."

It may be noticed, however, that the judgment of the High Court indicates by the reference made to local usage, that the annual sinking of such wells is not dependent on the zamíndár's previous consent.

The Government of the North-Western Provinces considers that, under the circumstances, legislation is necessary, and this conclusion appears unavoidable. Whatever view be taken of the economical advantages or disadvantages of Rights of Occupancy in land, it must be admitted that when such rights have been recognized by law, they constitute rights of property which ought to be protected by law like any other rights. A kachcha well is often a mere hole in the ground, a few feet deep, made at the cost of a few rupees, and, as stated by the Board of Revenue, it is very commonly impossible without such wells to obtain any crop at all. It is clearly not reasonable that, in consequence of the performance of acts which are essential to the proper cultivation of the land, a tenant should be liable to ejectment from his holding and to forfeiture of his property.

Legislation having thus, in the opinion of the Local Government, and of the Board of Revenue, and it may be presumed, of the High Court also, become urgently necessary, it is thought desirable to take the opportunity of generally assimilating the law of the North-Western Provinces, in respect to tenants' improvements, to the laws lately passed for the neighbouring Provinces of Oudh and the Panjáb. Provisions have been added for the better protection of the landlord. While the Bill authorizes the tenant to make certain improvements on the land in his occupation, and enables him, under certain circumstances, to claim compensation for the outlay incurred by him in making them, it also gives to the landlord a remedy against the tenant, in case of injury being done to the land by bad cultivation or otherwise, and provides that the making of improvements shall raise no presumption, in favour of the tenant, of any right of property in the land.

Following the suggestion contained in the decision of the High Court, above quoted, the Bill enables the Courts to give equitable relief and compensation to the landlord for injury actually caused by the tenant to the land, without necessarily, in every case, inflicting on the tenant the extreme penalty of ejectment from his holding.

The provisions regarding the manner in which compensation for tenants' improvements may be claimed and awarded, are, in principle, identical with the provisions which have already received the sanction of the Legislature, in the Oudh Rent Act and in the Panjáb Tenancy Act, and it is therefore not thought necessary to notice them in detail. In regard to compensation for improvements, the Bill will only come into operation in the absence of any agreement between the landlord and tenant, and it will not interfere with their power to enter into any special contract that they think fit.

The following Bill was introduced into the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 4th November 1868:—

No. 30 OF 1868.

A Bill further to amend the Criminal Procedure of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces.

Preamble.

WHEREAS under Section 12 of Act No. XXIV of 1866 (to amend the procedure of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces of the Presidency of Fort William) when a European British subject is tried by jury before the said Court, the majority of the jurors shall, if he so requires before the jury is empanelled for his trial, consist of Europeans or Americans, or of both Europeans and Americans, and the procedure on such trial is regulated by the said Act:

And whereas under Section 29 of the Letters Patent for the said High Court, dated the seventeenth day of March 1866, and Section 325 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when a person not an European nor an American is tried by jury before the said Court, at least one-half the jurors, if he so desires, consists of persons not Europeans or Americans, and the procedure in such trial is regulated by the said Code:

And whereas under the circumstances hereinbefore recited, in any case before the said High Court in which an European British subject is charged jointly with a person not an European nor an American, the persons so charged must be tried separately, and it is expedient to provide that they may be tried together and that the procedure on such trial shall be uniform:

And whereas it is also expedient to relieve the Judges of the said High Court from the duty of recording evidence in the manner prescribed by Sections 198 and 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Power to try Native together with European British subject.

1. In any case before the said High Court in which an European British subject is charged jointly with a person not being an European British subject, a jury may be empanelled for the trial of both persons so charged, and they may be tried together, and the procedure on the trial shall be the same as it would have been had the European British subject been tried separately.

In any case before the said High Court in which an European British subject is charged jointly with a person not being an European British subject, and the former, before the jury is empanelled, requires the majority of the jurors to consist of Europeans and Americans, or both Europeans and Americans, the latter person shall be tried together with the former, and the procedure on the trial shall be the same as it would have been had the former been tried separately:

Proviso.

Provided that in any such case where the person not an European British subject so requires before the said jury is empanelled, he shall be tried separately by a jury of which at least one-half shall consist of persons not being Europeans or Americans.

Suspension of sections 198 and 364 of Code of Criminal Procedure.

2. The operation of sections 198 and 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is hereby suspended in the said High Court, and in any case coming before the Court in the exercise of its ordinary or its extraordinary original criminal jurisdiction, the Judges of such Court shall take down the evidence or the substance thereof in such manner as the Court shall by any general rule from time to time direct.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

As the law stands, when an European British subject and a Native are jointly charged with an offence, and committed for trial to the High Court for the North-Western Provinces, they must be tried separately, and in each trial a different procedure is followed—the European being tried in exercise of the Court's ordinary, while the Native is tried in exercise of its extraordinary, criminal jurisdiction.

This state of things having been found to cause practical inconvenience, the present Bill has been framed at the desire of the Local Government. The Bill simply enacts that such persons so charged may be tried together and by the same procedure, but gives the Native the option of refusing to be tried by a jury, the majority of which are Europeans or Americans.

The opportunity has been taken of enabling the Judges of the High Court for the North-Western Provinces, when exercising original criminal jurisdiction, to record the evidence in the same manner as the Judges of the other High Courts record it in criminal cases.

Lieutenant C. O'Donel, Sub-Assistant Commissary Genral, 3rd Class (and Acting Sub-Assistant Commissary General, 1st Class), to be Sub-Assistant Commissary General, 2nd Class... ...

No. 1058 of 1868.—The undermentioned Officers, having completed five years' service as substantive Lieutenant Colonels in the Staff Corps, are promoted to the rank of Colonel by Brevet from the dates specified, under the operation of Clause 2 of the Royal Warrant, dated 16th January 1861, subject to Her Majesty's approval :—

Lieutenant Colonel Dillon Gustavus Pollard, Madras Staff Corps ...	12th June 1868.
Lieutenant Colonel Francis Greetham Kempster, Madras Staff Corps ...	5th October 1868.

Lieutenant Colonel Alexander Robert Fraser, Madras Staff Corps ... } 5th October 1868.

The promotion of these Officers, published in Government General Order No. 597 and No. 958 of 1868, is cancelled.

No. 1059 of 1868.—Materials for the repair of harness and saddlery will, in future, be supplied to Officers Commanding Horse Artillery and Field Batteries, on payment from the authorized contract allowance.

2. The first supply of materials, calculated for six months' consumption, will be issued on 1st April. Indents for the articles required are to be prepared on the 1st January and 1st July, and submitted to the Office of the Inspector General of Ordnance, for sanction.

3. Lists of materials which will be supplied from Arsenals and Magazines, with their prices, will be furnished to Commanding Officers of Batteries.

4. The articles so supplied will be debited to the Officer's personal account in the Ordnance Examiner's Office, and credit will be given for the sums entered as payments for the supplies in the general state of batteries. The payments may be made in instalments, but the full amount of the half-year's supply must be paid within six months, or before the next supply reaches the battery.

5. The materials supplied under this authority are to be at the risk of the Commanding Officer from the day they are accepted as in good condition, and he will be liable for any loss or deterioration from that date. On the arrival of the stores with the battery, they are to be examined, and if any of the articles are objected to, an application must at once be made for a station committee, the report of which is to be sent to the Inspector General of Ordnance, when orders will be issued for the disposal of any articles condemned. All packages received with the stores must be returned to Arsenals and Magazines, and it is clearly to be understood that no additional carriage will, under any circumstances, be allowed for the conveyance of these stores on the line of march.

No. 1060 of 1868.—The undermentioned soldier of Her Majesty's service is permitted to reside and draw his pay in India as an out-pensioner of Chelsea Hospital, in accordance with the Royal Warrant of the 23rd July 1864, pending a reference to the Home authorities as to the amount of his pension:—

Sergeant William Stockdale, C. Battery, F. Brigade, Royal Horse Artillery.

No. 1061 of 1868.—With reference to Government General Order No. 281, dated 12th March 1867, in which the rates of pay of Riding Masters are laid down, it is notified that service, as Non-Commissioned and Commissioned Officer to entitle the Riding Master to increased rates of pay, is not required to be continuous.

No. 1062 of 1868.—The following orders issued by the Resident at Hyderabad are confirmed:—

No. 176 of the 27*th October* 1868.—Confirming, as a temporary measure, the Regimental Order issued to the 4th Cavalry Hyderabad Contingent, dated the 12th October 1868, directing Captain H. C. Onslow, Adjutant, to act as 2nd in Command, and Lieutenant R. Ottley, Squadron Subaltern, to act in addition as Adjutant, vice Major Dowker, appointed to the 3rd Cavalry Hyderabad Contingent.

No. 177 of the 29*th October* 1868.—Confirming the Regimental Order issued to the 6th Infantry Hyderabad Contingent, dated 17th October 1868, directing Lieutenant H. deP. Rennick, Wing Subaltern, to officiate in addition as Adjutant.

No. 1063 of 1868.—His Excellency the Governor General in Council is pleased to make the following appointment:—

Ordnance Commissariat Department.

Lieutenant C. C. Dyce, of the Royal Artillery, to officiate as a 3rd Class Commissary of Ordnance.

No. 1064 of 1868.—The Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India having, with certain modifications, approved generally of the rules relative to the absence on leave of Military Officers, published in Government General Order No. 613, dated 19th June 1868, the following revised rules are published in substitution of those contained in the order above referred to.

These rules will be applicable to all Officers who may elect to adopt them belonging to the several Indian Staff Corps or to the Indian Army, and in regard to the period of leave of absence during which appointments may be held, and in regard to the increased allowances they will also be applicable to Officers of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, late of the Indian Army, holding permanent staff appointments not of a regimental nature.

The question of the application of these rules to the Officers generally of Her Majesty's British Forces serving in India is still under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

To obviate confusion or misconception as to the rules referred to, those previously in existence and those now sanctioned will be severally designated as the Furlough Rules of 1796, of 1854, or of 1868.

The term "Furlough Pay" having now a changed and two-fold signification, in all future orders and references "Furlough Pay" will be understood as the half Indian salary within the prescribed limits, specified in paragraph 5 of these rules, converted at the exchange of 2 shillings for the rupee, whilst "English Furlough Pay" will represent the rates heretofore allowed to the several grades as English pay under the rules of 1796 and 1854.

I.—The distinction with respect to allowances hitherto drawn between furlough on private affairs and sick leave, is abolished, both kinds of leave being included under the general term furlough, provision, however, being made for the obtainment of furlough under medical certificate, without all the restrictions applicable to furlough when taken without medical certificate.

II.—Leave taken under the rules now prescribed will not involve forfeiture of appointment, except in the cases herein specially provided for.

III.—The rules now prescribed do not affect the provisions of Act XXXIII. of George III., Chapter 52, Section 70; but an absentee cannot retain his appointment and draw absentee allowances, except under the rules now prescribed.* Nor do they affect the regulations by which General Officers Commanding Divisions and Brigades can only obtain limited periods of leave without forfeiting their commands.

IV.—Leave of absence will in future be of three kinds, viz.:—

I.—Furlough in or out of India.
II.—General leave on private affairs or sick certificate in India, or short leave to sea.
III.—Privilege leave.

Chapter I.

Furlough.

V.—An Officer drawing staff pay in addition to pay of rank, proceeding on furlough, will be allowed pay at the rate of 50 per cent. of the salary of his substantive office. But an Officer on civil employ and drawing consolidated salary will be allowed 50 per cent. of the average salary drawn by him for three years prior to his proceeding on furlough. No absentee shall in either case draw more than £1,200 or less than £250 per annum. The term salary will signify the total amount drawn by an Officer, whether as consolidated pay or staff allowances in addition to pay, but will not include any extra or special allowances. It is to be clearly understood that an Officer absent on furlough, who may be transferred to another office during his absence, shall be entitled, for the entire period of his furlough, to pay at the rate sanctioned to him when leaving India, provided that an Officer whose term of office shall lapse during his furlough shall cease to draw his half staff salary from the date of such lapse. An Officer will also be entitled to the benefit of his promotion to a higher Staff Corps or regimental rank whilst on furlough, subject to the maximum limit.

Officers not in staff employ will receive half the Indian pay of their rank, provided that in no case will an Officer entitled to furlough receive less than the above minimum of £250 per annum.

NOTE.—Officers who may be entitled to income allowance from the Military Fund during absence in Europe, will draw their half salary or minimum absentee allowance under the foregoing clause, subject to a deduction equivalent to the amount of such income allowance.

* The section referred to is quoted below.—

Section 70.—"And be it further enacted that no person who shall have held any civil or military station whatever in India, in the service of the said United Company, being under the rank or degree of a Member of Council or Commander-in-Chief of the Forces, and who, having departed from India by leave of the Governor General in Council, shall not return to India within the space of five years next after such departure, shall be entitled to any rank or restoration of office, or be capable of again serving in India, either in the European or Native Corps of Troops or in the civil line of the Company's service, unless in the case of any Civil Servant of the Company, it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Court of Directors that such absence was occasioned by sickness or infirmity, or unless such person be permitted to return with his rank to India by a vote or resolution passed by way of ballot by three parts in four of the proprietors assembled in General Court, specially convened for that purpose, whereof eight days' previous notice of the time and purpose of such meeting shall be given in The London Gazette, or unless in the case of any Military Officer, it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the said Court of Directors and the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, that such absence was occasioned by sickness or infirmity, or some inevitable accident."

VI.—All grants of furlough on private affairs are subject to the exigencies of the public service, of which exigency the Government is to be exclusively the judge, and to any regulations that may be found necessary for limiting the number of absentees.

VII.—The maximum amount of furlough on private affairs to be taken at any one time, carrying pay and retention of appointment, will be two years.

VIII.—A period of at least three years' service after return from last furlough, except furlough under Rule XI., must be completed before furlough can again be taken unless obtained under medical certificate (see Rules XIII. and XIV.)

IX.—An Officer will be eligible for two years' furlough on the completion of eight years' actual service in India, for a third year after a further period of six years' actual service, and for a fourth or fifth year after similar intervals of six years. The grant of furlough to an Officer eligible for it will be subject only to the conditions specified in Rules VI. and VII. The fact of having taken furlough on medical certificate will not affect the grant of these furloughs, except as to the conditions laid down in Rules VIII., XIII., and XVI.

X.—An Officer eligible for furlough need not take the whole amount to which his service entitles him, but may apply for any portion thereof as an instalment; and in that case the balance will remain at his credit in any future computation of the amount of furlough to which he may be entitled.

Illustrations.

(1.)—An Officer who has served nine years in India is entitled to two years' furlough. He takes only one year, and after his return remains in India for five years. He is then eligible for two years' furlough as follows:—

Total service in India	...	14 years.
Furlough due on that service	..	3 „
Furlough already taken	.	1 „
Balance for which he is eligible	...	2 „

(2.)—An Officer who has served 20 years in India without taking furlough is entitled to four years' furlough. He can only take, however, two years at one time carrying pay, the balance remaining at his credit in any future computation of furlough to which he may be entitled. He can take that balance after completing three years' service from the date of his return from the first instalment.

XI.—Furlough on urgent private affairs for six months with pay equivalent to the British regimental pay of his rank to be extended to a year, if necessary, may be granted, when the Officer is not eligible for ordinary furlough. The said period may form part of the periods of either eight or six years referred to in Rules VIII. and IX.

XII.—Subject to State considerations, there will be no restriction as to the places to which an Officer may resort during furlough.

XIII.—Absence on medical certificate for a longer period than two years at one time, or departure on such furlough within three years of the date of return from a previous furlough, except furlough under Rule XI., will involve forfeiture of appointment. Such furlough may, however, be extended to a third year on English furlough pay.

In the event of an Officer not being able to return to his duty after an absence of three years, it will rest with the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India in Council to order him to appear before a Medical Board, with a view to placing him on the retired list, if entitled to pension, or on the half-pay list.

Should the circumstances of the case warrant a further extension of leave, it can only be granted without pay.

XIV.—An Officer not entitled to furlough, whose health may necessitate his taking it within three years from the date of last return may, under the usual medical certificate, obtain such amount as may be duly certified to be necessary for the restoration of his health, but will only receive English furlough pay, and must vacate any appointment he may be holding.

XV.—An Officer entitled to furlough, whose health may necessitate his absence from India, will be compelled to take leave as furlough under Rule IX, but without forfeiting any passage money to which he may be entitled under Military Fund Rules, or, if a Subaltern, by Regulation when proceeding on medical certificate.

Any extension of this furlough beyond the period to which he may be entitled under Rule IX, will be regarded, in all respects, as furlough on medical certificate. Such extension will not be allowed to take effect, until the Officer shall have exhausted the entire amount of his available furlough on private affairs. If the aggregate of two years' leave is exceeded, the Officer will after that date come under the provisions of Rule XIV.

XVI.—The aggregate amount of furlough with pay and retention of appointment, whether on private affairs or on medical certificate, that may be granted to an Officer during his service, will be limited to eight years.

XVII.—If taken in India, furlough will be reckoned from the date of the absentee quitting his station to the date of his return thereto; if taken out of India, from the date of the sailing of the vessel in which he may have embarked to the date of his disembarkation in India.

XVIII.—Preparatory leave to embark for Europe or elsewhere on furlough will be granted for any period not ordinarily exceeding 30 days. Leave to the same limit, to enable him to rejoin on his return from furlough, will be granted from the date of his disembarkation in India.

XIX.—Furlough allowances shall be payable monthly if payment is taken in India, and quarterly if payment is taken in England.

XX.—Advances of furlough pay will continue to be made in India to those Officers who desire it for three months from date of embarkation. Payments in continuation will be made in England on the expiration of six months from that date.

XXI.—The last pay certificate issued to each Officer who may be granted furlough, whether on private affairs, or on medical certificate, will specify the rate of the pay and staff salary of his last substantive appointment, and the rate to which he will be entitled in Europe in virtue of Rule V.

XXII.—An Officer acting in India for an absentee will be restricted for the entire period of such acting to the half staff salary of the appointment in which he may be acting, in addition to the full pay of his rank, and the half staff salary of his own appointment, if he possess one. The staff salary granted to an acting Officer will however, in no such case be less than Rs. 100 per mensem.

XXIII.—The privilege heretofore granted to Military Officers of counting the proportion of leave noted in the margin as service for pension is retained. The periods of service qualifying for pension remain unaltered.

XXIV.—In computing the furlough on private affairs to which an Officer who has already enjoyed some portion of such furlough will be entitled, under these rules, it will be necessary to deduct the total amount of the furlough on private affairs of which he may have availed himself during his service from the total periods to which under Rule IX. he can lay claim. The balance will represent the leave to which he will be entitled on the expiration of not less than three years from his last return to duty.

Illustration.

(1.)—An Officer, who had obtained under the existing rules two years' furlough after ten years' service, returns to India on the date on which this order is promulgated. He accepts its conditions, and serves four years longer in India. On the expiration of that term, he can take one year's furlough, thus—

(2.)—An Officer of four years' service has proceeded on sick certificate to England for 20 months, extended afterwards to two years. He returns, serves six years in India, takes two years' furlough, and returns, to India about the time of the promulgation of these rules, which he accepts. He must serve four years before he can take an additional year's furlough, thus—

CHAPTER II.

General Leave on Private Affairs and Sick Certificate in India.

XXV.—An Officer will be eligible, as at present, to take leave on private affairs on sick certificate in India for any period not exceeding six months, at the discretion of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, or of the Government under which he may be serving. During the entire period of his absence on this account, the Officer will be entitled, as at present, to his full pay and a moiety of his staff salary. Leave taken under this rule will form no part of the eight years' aggregate furlough. If this indulgence should be taken advantage of for a third year consecutively, the Officer will lose his staff appointment.

XXVI.—Leave on sick certificate for a period exceeding six months, capable of extension, under renewed medical certificate, to a limit of one year may be granted to any Officer who, in the opinion of a Medical Board, may require it. Leave of this nature, taken after the promulgation of these rules, will be held to constitute a part of the maximum period of eight years' leave of absence to which an Officer is entitled in his entire period of service, but will not be regarded as furlough, nor will it affect the intervals entitling to furlough laid down in Rule IX. During this leave the absentee will draw a moiety of his staff salary in addition to the pay of his rank.

XXVII.—Short leave not exceeding three months on private affairs or sick certificate, may also be taken to sea, on the above condition, but absence from India for any longer period will be treated as furlough.

XXVIII.—All general leave taken in India counts as part of the leave reckoning against service for pension.

Privilege Leave.

XXIX.—Privilege leave may be granted, as at present, for sixty days in each year to all Officers in military employ, without deduction from the salaries and emoluments drawn by them. General leave, in extension of privilege leave, can only be granted on the ground of sickness, or some other serious emergency which could not have been foreseen when the Officer proceeded on privilege leave. Privilege leave may, however, be converted into general leave with the sanction of the Commander-in-Chief or the Government.

XXX.—In the case of the stations noted in the margin, privilege leave may, as at present, be granted for ninety days to Officers of local Corps, or of Corps which are usually employed in one or other of the districts named.

Assam.	Bunnoo.
Shillong.	Dera Ismael Khan.
Erinpoora.	Dera Ghazee Khan.
Deolee.	Rajanpore.
Khairwara.	Jacobabad.
Khotra.

XXXI.—An Officer is at liberty to proceed wherever he may desire on privilege leave, provided he can ensure his return before the expiration of his leave.

XXXII.—Privilege leave cannot be taken in continuation of furlough, nor can furlough be obtained in continuation of privilege leave. If furlough be obtained by an Officer while absent on privilege leave, the privilege leave will be converted into general leave, the Officer for that period sacrificing a moiety of his staff salary.

Military Officers in Civil Employ.

XXXIII.—Military Officers in Civil or Political employ taking leave in India come, as respects periods of leave obtainable and amount of pay to be granted, under the Civil Leave Rules. When they take leave out of India, they come under the Military Leave Rules.

Subsidiary Rule.

XXXIV.—Officers of the Indian Military and Medical Services will be required generally to notify their intention to accept these rules or to adhere to those now existing, on the first occasion of their taking furlough or general leave after the publication of this order. Such election must be considered final, and under no plea whatever will an Officer be subsequently relieved from the choice thus made.

Officers who may determine to abide by existing rules will be allowed to proceed on furlough on the conditions laid down in Rules VII., VIII., and XIII. to the extent to which they may be entitled under the Furlough Regulations of 1854, and on the rates of pay contemplated in those Regulations, but retaining their appointments. The principle laid down in Rule XV. must, however, be applied in those cases.

If an Officer under the Furlough Rules of 1796 elects the present rules, his service for pension will be reckoned under the former rules up to 1st July 1868, and thenceforward under the rules of 1868.

The foregoing rules take effect from the 1st July 1868 as respects retention of appointments and terms under which leave will be granted, but half staff allowances will not be available for Officers now on leave in cases where the acting Officer has already come into receipt of the full staff salary. Nor can Officers who have vacated appointments which have since been permanently filled up, have any claim to be restored to them.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

MUNICIPAL TAXATION.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Government of India in the Home Department (Public),—Nos. 4440 to 4447, dated the 6*th November* 1868.

RESOLUTION.—The Governor General in Council desires to call the attention of Local Governments and Administrations to the subject of municipal taxation, and more especially to that portion of it which is levied under the name of octroi or town duties.

2. In the Resolution of the Government of India in the Financial Department, published in the Gazette of India on the 14th September 1864, it was stated as follows:—

"Town duties are very effective for raising money. They existed under the Native regime, under the name of choongee, or handful, implying that everything that passed had to pay a small contribution, and in some parts of India they are more popular than direct taxes of any kind. If they could be confined to things consumed in the town without interfering with the transit trade, they would be only open to the objection that they fall in undue proportion upon the poor. But after a full trial of this tax in Bengal and the North-Western Provinces, it was abolished in 1835 as being alike injurious to the general trade and to the towns immediately affected, and as not being capable of effectual remedy by any contrivances of bonded-warehouses or drawbacks. Town duties have been lately re-established as a municipal tax in many places in the North-Western Provinces, Oudh, and the Punjab, and the old vice of interference with the general trade immediately re-appeared with the additional aggravation that this time the public at large were mulcted for the advantage of local interests. It was proposed to build a bridge over the Jumna at Agra at a cost of £80,000 out of municipal funds. The ample resources of the new municipality were explained by the Table of Duties. Among them was a duty upon all the cotton brought to Agra to be sent to Calcutta by rail or river. Soon after, the Commanding Officer at Cawnpore, as the head of the local municipality, was reported to have ordered a similar duty to be levied. The unchecked multiplication of these local exactions would soon re-produce the worst evils of the old transit and town duties.

"The town duties which were abolished in 1835 were levied only upon eight articles of local consumption, but there appears to be no limit to the number of articles upon which they are exacted since they have been revived as a municipal tax. There are 197 articles, many of which branch out into numerous sub-divisions, upon which town duties are levied in Zillah Seetapore, in Oudh; and at Broach they amount to 182 under the head of 'articles imported for consumption;' 5 under 'raw material imported to be manufactured,' and 51 under 'articles (the produce or manufacture of the place) exported,' or 238 in all, without including sub-divisions. This multiplication of petty exactions is open to great objection. The tax ought to be confined to a few articles of local consumption, such as ghee, fire-wood, fruit, vegetables, fowls, eggs, and animals for slaughter, which do not enter into the general trade of the country, and which, being recognizable at first sight, do not involve the stoppage and search of other commodities."

3. In the foregoing extract the proper principles on which octroi duties should be levied are clearly defined. Such duties should be restricted to articles actually consumed in the towns, and should not be imposed upon articles of general commerce, or interfere with the natural course of transit trade.

4. The Government of India has reason to believe that these sound principles, the truth of which has been established by the prolonged experience of those countries of Europe in which octroi duties form commonly a source of municipal revenue, have been frequently lost sight of, and that to meet the burden of an annually-increasing expenditure upon police, education, or sanitary improvements, a wide-spread system of taxation has been introduced, injurious to interests on which the burden in a great measure falls, and standing in the way of the proper development of the commerce of the country. It is to little purpose that the Imperial Government reduces or abolishes customs duties in the interests of trade, if municipalities are permitted to levy duties on articles of commerce passing through their limits.

5 In all parts of India municipal taxation is largely on the increase, and there is a growing tendency to overlook, for the sake of small local improvements, the real injury that is being inflicted upon important general interests.

6. The Government of India does not consider it necessary to recapitulate here any of the standard arguments against transit duties. Such duties have long since been condemned by universally accepted maxims of policy, and it will be more to the purpose to give a few out of the many instances that might be chosen to show how fundamentally these maxims have been violated, and how necessary the interference of the Supreme Government has become.

7. At Kurrachee, a large proportion of the municipal revenue has for some years been derived from duties, which are in fact transit duties on the trade passing through that town and port. Propositions have lately been made to authorize this system by fresh legislation, and to impose, for local purposes, taxes on metals, cotton, piece goods, cloth, wool, grain, hides, indigo, timber, and many other commodities entering into the wholesale general trade of the country. There is reason to believe that much of the produce that is taxed is not even taken into the town, but is carried directly from the railway station to the ship by which it is exported.

8. At Bombay, the municipality has lately proposed a scheme for levying transit duties in the most naked form on cotton, opium, and metals passing through the town.

9. At Madras, an Act has been passed containing a provision for enabling the municipality to levy a sea-toll, at the rate of four annas per ton, on every boat or raft carrying merchandize or baggage to or from the town. In giving his assent to this Act on the 5th September 1867, His Excellency the Governor General issued the following instructions:—"This toll appears to the Governor General to be a mere impost on trade for the purposes of the municipality in return for no service whatever. It is, in fact, an almost undisguised transit duty, and under circumstances in which such an impost is least excusable. * * * Such a bill is, moreover, generally contrary to public policy: it defeats the object which the Government of India has in view in the interest of trade, in reducing and abolishing customs duties, and, therefore, while the Governor General is unwilling to withhold his assent to the Act on account of the provisions in question, he thinks it right to desire that the power of levying sea-tolls conferred by them may not be exercised."

10. In the Central Provinces, town duties are collected in all the principal towns, and it has been found impossible to prevent them from occasionally degenerating into transit duties on some of the articles taxed.

11. The same is true in the North-Western Provinces. In Agra, one of the great entrepôts of the trade between the British territories and Gwalior and Rajpootana, sugar is taxed by the municipality, although not intended for consumption in the town, and although the day after its arrival it may change hands and be sent off to Rajpootana.

12. The principle on which these duties are levied in Oudh and the Punjab is the same. In Oudh, during the prevalence of the late famine in Behar, Tirhoot, and Bengal, when an immense exportation of grain was going on to supply the wants of the latter provinces, duties, which could not properly be called anything but transit duties, were systematically levied in several places on every cart-load and boat-load of grain that was exported. Similar transit duties were levied not long ago on timber brought from the Oudh forests for exportation to distant markets.

13. It is believed that Bengal is the only province in this Presidency to which similar remarks would not be more or less applicable.

14. That this system of taxation should in so short a time have acquired such wide-spread development is easily accounted for. No imposts are so generally popular among the more influential classes in towns. They yield large revenues, they provide the means for carrying out many local improvements, and in so far as they are really transit duties, they enable the townspeople to make others bear the burden of taxation which should properly fall upon themselves.

15. And it would seem that not only have some of the proper principles of municipal taxation been thus lost sight of, but in many parts of India a fundamental principle of taxation has also been disregarded. It has always been held as one of the criterions of a good tax that it should take as little as possible above what it brings into the Treasury; in other words, that the cost of collection should be reduced to a minimum. From a return recently received from the North-Western Provinces, it appears that in some instances the cost of collecting municipal duties has reached 33 per cent. of the receipts, and the average cost is nearly 20 per cent. This mainly arises from the fact that these duties are levied in many places where the population is small. It is clear that it is only in important towns, where the consumption of the people is large, that such a system of taxation can under any circumstances be appropriate or profitable.

16. For these reasons the Government of India desires to call the attention of all Local Governments and Administrations to the wide departure that has of late been allowed from the principles enunciated in 1864 and quoted at the beginning of this Resolution. Whereas it was intended that town duties should be strictly limited to articles actually consumed in towns, or put to a final use in them, and that all interference with trade should be scrupulously avoided, a system has grown up under which the burdens necessary to meet purely local wants have been in a great measure transferred by local authorities to other people.

17. The Resolution of 1864 specifically pointed out the articles to which municipal taxation should be confined, and what has been above stated shows the necessity of repeating those instructions.

18. It is essential that town duties on articles of consumption should fall entirely on the population of the town for the benefit of which such taxation is imposed. Similar duties, as stated by Sir C. Trevelyan in his financial Statement of April 1864, were abolished 30 years ago, because it was found that they interfered with the free course of the general trade through the principal marts. "The principle," he said, "that town duties are a tax on the consumption of the towns for whose benefit they are levied, and that they should on no account be extended to any article belonging to the transit or general trade, ought to be jealously guarded."

19. If these principles be strictly acted upon, and the duties be moderate in amount, the Governor General in Council is of opinion that there is in many parts of India nothing objectionable in this system of taxation for local purposes.

20. In wealthy communities, like those of Europe, it may be admitted that the balance of argument is in favor of raising municipal revenues by direct taxation only, and leaving the local trade entirely free. But in so poor a country as India, it will, in the judgment of the Governor General in Council, be more commonly the best course to combine direct with indirect taxation; for by this means alone can a sufficiently broad base be secured for raising a sufficient income without undue pressure on individuals. So long as octroi duties on grain and other articles of consumption are kept at a moderate rate, they do not injuriously affect small retail transactions with which the poorer classes are mainly concerned. That such duties are commonly far more popular in India than any direct taxation, is a strong argument in their favor, and the prejudice against them founded on the common practice of England should not be allowed to prevent their introduction under suitable limitations, where there is reason to think that the general feeling would be to prefer them to other forms of taxation.

21. The Government of India also desires to point out that a municipal body can have no claim to take tolls on traffic entering its boundaries by roads or canals. Such imposts are merely a means of raising money from the commerce of the country for the benefit of the town in which they are levied. It may be quite legitimate for a municipality to levy a toll on a road or bridge constructed within its own limits and for the convenience of the town; but when the cost of the work has been recovered, the road or bridge should be thrown open to the public, or the toll reduced to the minimum necessary to keep the work in proper repair.

22. The Government of India does not forget that if municipal taxation be thus regulated, there may be in some places a considerable decrease of municipal revenues.

23. There may be consequent difficulty in meeting the necessary charges on account of police establishments which are now paid from municipal funds.

24. It will be for Local Governments and Administrations to review the whole question of municipal taxation and expenditure, and the Government of India will be prepared to consider any well-founded claims for assistance from the imperial revenues in bearing the charges for town police, when it can be shown that the observance of the principles laid down in this Resolution renders it proper to revise the existing adjustment of the shares of those charges between the Government and the Municipality.

25. The Governor General in Council therefore prescribes for general adoption the following rules. He requests that the existing practice may be brought into conformity with them and that they may not be deviated from, without the previous sanction of the Government of India:—

I.—Subject to the limitations contained in Rule II., no town duty or cess under any name shall be levied by any municipal body on any commodity not included in the following list, viz.:—

(1).—Articles of food or drink for men or animals

(2).—Animals for slaughter.

(3).—Articles used for fuel, for lighting, or for washing.

(4).—Articles used in the construction of buildings.

(5).—Drugs, gums, spices, and perfumes.

(6).—Tobacco.

II.—No such duty shall be levied on any of the following articles, viz.:—

(1).—Articles liable to customs duty, and imported into India by sea.

(2).—Salt.

(3).—Opium.

(4).—Fermented or spirituous liquors manufactured in India, and drugs liable to excise or abkaree duty.

III.—No such duty shall be levied, excepting on things brought into a town for actual use or consumption therein. No such duty shall be levied on goods which, being brought into a town, shall be again exported, even though such goods shall have changed owners in the town. On the exportation of dutiable goods, the exporter shall be entitled to a refund of the amount of duty proved to have been paid on the import of those goods; a minimum sum, below which no refund shall be so claimable, being fixed with the approval of the Local Government.

IV.—Every municipality by which such duties are levied will provide, in such a manner as the Local Government may think fit, proper accommodation for the storing in warehouses or otherwise of articles in transit, liable to duty, but not intended for use or consumption within the limits of the municipality. Reasonable fees may be charged on articles stored in places provided under this rule for the accommodation of traders.

V.—No duties shall be levied on sales, or other trade transactions, of the kind known under the name of choongee, &c., nor any imposts on trade other than duties authorized under these rules.

VI.—No toll shall be levied by any municipality on any person, animal, or thing on entering the municipal limits or passing along any road, canal or river within those limits provided that this rule shall not prevent the levy of special payments, under lawful authority, for the use of any bridge, quay, wharf, lock or other work constructed or maintained at the cost of the municipality.

VII.—No town duty or toll shall be levied on goods, vehicles, &c., bonâ fide the property of the Government, brought within the municipal limits for the exclusive and direct use of Government. When the Government takes delivery of goods from a dealer or contractor within municipal limits, the above exemption shall not apply.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

MEASURES FOR THE DISCOVERY AND PRESERVATION OF THE RECORDS OF ANCIENT SANSCRIT LITERATURE.

Extract from a letter from PUNDIT RADHA KISN, Chief Pundit of the late Lahore Durbar, to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India,—dated 10*th May* 1868.

Your Excellency has issued orders for collecting the catalogues of Sanskrit, Arabic, and Persian books in existence in many parts of India. There are two things which would complete the information so much desired by the Oriental scholars of Europe and Asia. The Sanskrit list will necessarily remain incomplete, unless it contains the names of the books that are in the libraries of the Maharajahs of Jeypoor and Nepaul. The rarest books were collected by the liberal ancestors of the former from the time of Rajah Maun Sing, and as the latter country has never been under the subjection of Mahomedans, the oldest Sanskrit books are to be found there. A similar thing may be done with regard to the Sanskrit books that are in the great libraries of England, Germany, France, and other continential countries of Europe.

Lists of these books should be published in English and Sanskrit, and anything that your Excellency is pleased to order for the furtherance of the cause of learning, will be highly and gratefully appreciated by the scholars both of Europe and India.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Government of India in Home Department (Public),—Nos. 4338 to 4348, under date Simla, 3rd November 1868.

Read—

Extract from a letter from Pandit Rádhá Kisn, of Lahore, to His Excellency the Viceroy, dated the 10th May 1868, suggesting the compilation of a catalogue of all the Sanskrit manuscripts preserved in the libraries of India and Europe, and stating that any thing done towards the encouragement of Sanskrit learning would be gratefully appreciated by scholars.

Note by Mr. Whitley Stokes, dated the 6th August 1868, containing his opinion as to the best course to be followed by Government in order to give effect to the recommendation of Pundit Rádha Kisn.

RESOLUTION.—Mr. Stokes is of opinion that such a catalogue as the Pandit contemplates could be satisfactorily compiled only in Europe, and that any attempt to produce it at present would be premature. The following are the principal features of the scheme which he proposes for rendering the production of such a catalogue possible, and otherwise for the encouragement of Sanskrit learning :—

To print uniformly all procurable unprinted lists of the Sanskrit manuscripts in Indian libraries, and to send them to the various learned societies of Europe, and to individual scholars in Europe and India, with an intimation that the Government will carefully attend to their suggestions as to which of the manuscripts therein mentioned should be examined, purchased, or transcribed:

To institute searches for manuscripts, and to this end to prepare lists of desirable codices, to distribute these lists among scholars and other persons willing to assist in the search, with a request that they will report their discoveries to such officer as may from time to time be appointed by the Government of India, and to depute competent scholars on tours through the several Presidencies and Provinces, to examine the manuscripts reported upon, to seek new manuscripts, to purchase manuscripts procurable at reasonable rates, and to have copies made of such manuscripts as are unique or otherwise desirable, but which the possessors refuse to part with; and

To grant to the Asiatic Society of Bengal an additional allowance for the publication of Sanskrit works hitherto unprinted.

2. The statement given in the margin shows the financial result of the scheme, and the total cost, Rs. 24,000 a year, which it would entail on the imperial revenues, is not extravagant when compared with the importance of the object in view. His Excellency in Council, therefore, accords his general approval to the scheme, and requests that the Secretary in the Home Department will, in communication with Mr. Stokes, draw up such further instructions as may be necessary for carrying it out.

ORDER.—Ordered, that copy of this Resolution, and of the papers referred to, be forwarded to the Governments of Madras, Bombay, Bengal, North-Western Provinces and Panjab; the Chief Commissioners of Oudh and Central Provinces, and the Commissioner of Mysore and Coorg.

Ordered also, that a copy of this Resolution, and of the papers referred to, be forwarded to the Financial Department, and to the Asiatic Society of Bengal.

Ordered further, that a copy of this Resolution, and of the papers referred to, be forwarded to the Foreign Department for communication to the Political Officers under its control.

From A. P. HOWELL, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Home Department, to the Local Governments and Administrations,—Nos. 4349 to 4354, dated 3rd November 1868.

I am directed to forward copy of a Resolution this day recorded by the Governor General in Council in regard to the discovery and preservation of the records of ancient Sanskrit literature. His Excellency in Council has no doubt that the object in view will enlist zealous co-operation of ; and that among the servants of Government and other gentlemen in , European and Native, several will be found able and willing to assist in its attainment. The circumstances of each Province differ so materially that it is expedient only to lay down such general rules as may serve to secure the necessary degree of uniform and concerted action.

2. All procurable unprinted lists of Sanskrit MSS. in the Native libraries situate within the territories under , should be printed uniformly in octavo, in the Nágarí character, and under the superintendence of a competent Editor, such as Bábu Rajendralála Mitra in Bengal, Mr. Burnell in Madras and Dr. Bühler in Bombay. Fifty copies of each list so printed will be sent to the Government of India in the Home Department, and the remainder of the edition (which need not exceed 150 copies) may be sold to the public, or otherwise disposed of as the Local Government or Administration thinks fit.

3. Competent scholars should be sent annually on tours to examine the MSS. named in the Native catalogues so printed, to seek new MSS. (especially those named in the lists of desiderata hereinafter mentioned), to explain to Native scholars at the different places visited, the objects and importance of the mission, to purchase such MSS. as the possessors are willing to sell at a reasonable rate, and to employ copyists to transcribe codices which are unique, extremely old, or otherwise desirable, but which the possessors refuse to part with. The gentlemen sent on tours will make reports to their respective Local Governments, and such reports will be transmitted to the Government of India in the Home Department. The annual expense of the several tours should be so arranged as not to exceed, in the case of each Local Government and Administration, the amount marginally noted.

	Rs.
Bengal (L. P.)	1,000
Bombay	1,000
Madras and Mysore	1,000
North-Western Provinces	500
Punjab	500
Oudh	500
Central Provinces	500
Rajputana	1,000

Note.—The officer sent by Madras will extend his researches to Mysore.

The Governor General's Agent will administer the sum appropriated for tours in Rajputana.

4. Scholars, both in India and in Europe, will be invited to transmit lists of desiderata. Those in Europe will be requested to communicate with the Government of India through the Secretary of State, those in India through the Local Governments. From the suggestions so received, general lists of desiderata will be prepared and circulated annually, and the notice of Local Governments and Administrations will be drawn to entries in the catalogues received from them, which seem to refer to any work in the lists of desiderata.

5. Subjoined is a specimen form in which, as far as possible, notices of MSS. ascertained to exist may be prepared. Quarterly lists of the MSS. found during the previous qnarter, will be submitted in this form to the Government of India in the Home Department.

6. Local Governments and Administrations will use their discretion in purchasing or having copies made of the MSS. existing within their jurisdiction. His Excellency in Council would, however, suggest the desirability of bearing in mind the subjects which European scholars deem most valuable, and that MSS. of the Vedas and Vedangas and of their commentaries, law-books, grammars, vocabularies and philosophical treatises should be regarded as of primary importance. When transcripts are made, these should be in the modern Davanagari character. Copies of the Sanskrit MSS. existing in Southern India, if made in the Telugu or other Dravidian character, would be of little use to European Sanskritists and to the large majority of Native sholars.

7. The annual outlay in purchasing and transcribing MSS. should not exceed, in the case of each Local Government and Administration, the amount marginally noted. But if a valuable library be offered for sale, if any rare and rapidly perishing MSS. be available for transcription, or if there be any other ground for incurring extra expenditure, the local authorities should state the facts of the case to the Government of India, which will be ready to sanction any reasonable proposal in this behalf.

	Purchase. Rs.	Transcription. Rs
Bombay	1,000	1,200
Madras and Mysore ...	1,000	1,200

Punjab	500	600
Oudh	500	600

Rajputana	1,000	1,200

Note.—The sum allotted to Madras and Mysore will be expended under the direction of the Madras Government.

That allotted to Rajputana will be expended under the direction of the Governor General's Agent.

8. The original MSS. and transcripts so obtained should be carefully preserved apart in the office of the Secretariat of each Government and Administration pending the arrangements which may be made in each case for their ultimate diposal. Such arrangements will, from time to time, be communicated through the Government of India in the Home Department. Quarterly lists of the MSS. remaining undisposed of, will be forwarded to the Government of India by each Local Government.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1868.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

LEGISLATIVE.

The following Bill was introduced into the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 4th November 1868 :—

No. 30 OF 1868.

A Bill further to amend the Criminal Procedure of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces.

Preamble.

WHEREAS under Section 12 of Act No. XXIV of 1866 (to amend the procedure of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces of the Presidency of Fort William) when a European British subject is tried by jury before the said Court, the majority of the jurors shall, if he so requires before the jury is empanelled for his trial, consist of Europeans or Americans, or of both Europeans and Americans, and the procedure on such trial is regulated by the said Act :

And whereas under Section 29 of the Letters Patent for the said High Court, dated the seventeenth day of March 1866, and Section 325 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when a person not an European nor an American is tried by jury before the said Court, at least one-half the jurors, if he so desires, consists of persons not Europeans or Americans, and the procedure in such trial is regulated by the said Code ;

And whereas under the circumstances hereinbefore recited, in any case before the said High Court in which an European British subject is charged jointly with a person not an European nor an American, the persons so charged must be tried separately, and it is expedient to provide that they may be tried together, and that the procedure on such trial shall be uniform :

And whereas it is also expedient to relieve the Judges of the said High Court from the duty of recording evidence in the manner prescribed by Sections 198 and 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure ;

It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Power to try Native together with European British subject.

1. In any case before the said High Court in which an European British subject is charged jointly with a person not being an European British subject, a jury may be empanelled for the trial of both persons so charged, and they may be tried together, and the procedure on the trial shall be the same as it would have been had the European British subject been tried separately.

In any case before the said High Court in which an European British subject is charged jointly with a person not being an European British subject, and the former, before the jury is empanelled, requires the majority of the jurors to consist of Europeans and Americans, or both Europeans and Americans, the latter person shall be tried together with the former, and the procedure on the trial shall be the same as it would have been had the former been tried separately.

Proviso.

Provided that in any such case where the person not an European British subject so requires before the said jury is empanelled, he shall be tried separately by a jury of which at least one-half shall consist of persons not being Europeans or Americans.

Suspension of sections 198 and 364 of Code of Criminal Procedure.

2. The operation of sections 198 and 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is hereby suspended in the said High Court, and in any case coming before the Court in the exercise of its ordinary or its extraordinary original criminal jurisdiction, the Judges of such Court shall take down the evidence or the substance thereof in such manner as the Court shall by any general rule from time to time direct.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

As the law stands, when an European British subject and a Native are jointly charged with an offence, and committed for trial to the High Court for the North-Western Provinces, they must be tried separately, and in each trial a different procedure is followed—the European being tried in exercise of the Court's ordinary, while the Native is tried in exercise of its extraordinary, criminal jurisdiction.

This state of things having been found to cause practical inconvenience, the present Bill has been framed at the desire of the Local Government. The Bill simply enacts that such persons so charged may be tried together and by the same procedure, but gives the Native the option of refusing to be tried by a jury, the majority of which are Europeans or Americans.

The opportunity has been taken of enabling the Judges of the High Court for the North-Western Provinces, when exercising original criminal jurisdiction, to record the evidence in the same manner as the Judges of the other High Courts record it in criminal cases.

MARINE DEPARTMENT.

NOTIFICATION.

Fort William, the 19th November 1868.

No. 4 of 1868.—The following notice has been received for publication from the Chief Commissioner, British Burmah, in a letter dated Rangoon, 5th October 1868 :—

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

The following lighthouses are about to be established off the coast of British Burmah, probably on the 31st May 1869, and this is issued as a warning in case they should be so established :—

1.—Coast Lighthouse.

On the Krishna Shoal, Gulf of Martaban, Bay of Bengal. In latitude N. 15° 36′ 30″; longitude E. 95° 35′. A lighthouse on screw piles in 3 fathoms of water at low water on the south-eastern edge of the above shoal, showing a fixed dioptric light of the second order. The focal plane of the light 55 feet above high water rise, and fall 12 feet at full and change, visible 15 miles.

The light is cut off at W. S. W. to the westward, and at N. N. E. to the eastward, the centre of the light being S. E.

In making this light (the object of which is to enable vessels to round the Baraque Point so as to avoid the dangers of the Baraque Flat and Krishna Shoal) from the westward, a vessel should keep in not less than 7 fathoms of water to the south, steering east till the light bears N. W. and distant from 5 to 10 miles, then steering N. E. by N. 40 miles to make the China Buckeer lighthouse at the mouth of the Rangoon river. Vessels from the northward going south must not get in less than 6 fathoms of water to the westward, or make the light on a bearing to the W. of S. W. by S.; if after passing the light, a ship is going to the westward, she can turn in that direction when the light bears N. W., keeping in 7 fathoms.

2.—Harbour Lighthouse.

The China Buckeer for the mouth of the Rangoon river on the western side.

Hitherto the entrance to the channel to the Rangoon river has been marked by a light ship in 3½ fathoms of water.

This light ship will not be removed till this and the following lighthouse have been illuminated.

The lighthouse is situated on the high land of China Buckeer, which is generally first made by ships bound for Rangoon, and is about 2 miles north-east of the mouth of the China Buckeer river.

It is on screw piles, and the lower part being against a back ground of dark trees, will be painted white.

It is close to high water mark, but the sands at low water stretch 6 miles to the eastward of it. Ships must therefore keep well to seaward from it.

It will bear a dioptric light, the upper and lower cupolas showing a fixed light, and the centre drum a revolving light, attaining its greatest brilliancy once a minute; it can be seen 18 miles from the deck of a ship. It is in latitude N. 16° 17′ and longitude E. 96° 13′.

3.—Harbour Lighthouse.

The eastern grove for the mouth of the Rangoon river on the eastern side.

This lighthouse is also on screw piles, in latitude N. 16° 29′, longitude E. 96° 27′ 30″.

This lighthouse will show a light of 60° and will be cut off to the eastward due south; 10° of this angle will show a condensed light, the centre of which will pass through the present position of the light ship, or in a direction S. 30° W. This condensed light will be visible 18 miles from the mast head of a ship, and the remaining 50° of light will show 12 miles from the deck of a vessel.

Sailing directions for making the mouth of the Rangoon River.

Having made the China Buckeer Light from the southward or eastward, a vessel must not go to the northward of a bearing to it of west to avoid the eastern sands; and to avoid the western sands the Eastern Grove Light must not be brought to bear to the eastward of N. N. E.

All vessels steering from the eastward should make the China Buckeer Light bearing W. by N., and should not proceed on their course beyond a point where the eastern Grove Lighthouse will bear as above, N. N. E.

Ships are not to go up channel by the eastern Grove Light, but must anchor south of a bearing to the China Buckeer of west.

A ship anywhere to the southward of W. by N. bearing to the China Buckeer Light, and anywhere to the eastward of a bearing to the Eastern Grove of N. N. E., is in safety; anywhere to the northward or westward of these bearings, in danger.

This notice is intended to be preliminary, so that vessels may not be deceived in case they find the lights lighted as above, and the light ship removed. But as something may occur to prevent their being lighted at the time noted, 31st May 1869, until a second notice is issued that they have been lighted, masters of vessels should adopt all the precautions which they would adopt if the present light ship was to be their only guide.

No. 37.

INDIA OFFICE;
London, 7th October 1868.

To His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council.

SIR,—Para. 1. The Despatch of your Excellency in Council, dated 11th of April, No. 7 of 1868, forwarding copy of a correspondence relative to the construction of a system of central gaols in Bengal, and to the proposed erection of a model gaol on the cellular system at Calcutta, has been considered by me in Council.

Vide Supplement to the Gazette of India, dated 2nd May 1868, page 569.

2. I have read this able Despatch with much interest, and trust that the important subject to which it relates will continue to engage your attention.

3. While appreciating the great progress which has already been made in the improvement of Indian gaols, and while recognizing the wide differences which exist between the circumstances of India and those of this country, both as respects the climate and the character and habits of the people, and the difficulty which financial considerations offer to any schemes of extensive alterations, I am anxious that you should bear in mind the desirableness of taking every fitting opportunity to impress upon the prison system as much as possible both of the deterrent and of the reformatory character.

4. I am glad to learn that your officers are well acquainted with the principles upon which prison reform has been conducted in this country. Although the system adopted here may not be capable of direct application to India, it is founded upon principles of a general character, and of which many will be found capable of more or less adaptation to very varying local circumstances.

I have the honor to be,

SIR,

Your most obedient, humble Servant,

STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE.

FOREIGN DEPARTMENT.

REPORT ON THE TELEGRAPHIC MATERIAL USED DURING THE EXPEDITION TO ABYSSINIA, WITH REMARKS ON SUBJECT OF MILITARY TELEGRAPHY.

Report by LIEUTENANT O. ST. JOHN, R. E.,—(dated 5, John Street, Adelphi, 14*th August* 1868).

In accordance with my letter of the 6th ultimo, I have the honor to submit a detailed report on the telegraphic material entrusted to my charge for use in the recent expedition to Abyssinia, together with a few remarks on the subject of military telegraphy, suggested by the experience gained during the campaign.

To illustrate more clearly the points in which the material and apparatus were successful or deficient, I will first give a brief description of the telegraph, as erected along the road from Annesley Bay to Antalo, a distance of about 200 miles.

This line presented three well marked divisions: first, the belt of low land, 12 miles in breadth, between the sea and the hills; secondly, the tortuous defile, 50 miles long, leading to the highlands; and, lastly, the great plateau of Abyssinia. Of these the second alone presented any extraordinary natural difficulties. From Annesley Bay to Komaylé, at the entrance of the pass, the line was carried along the proposed course of the railway, for the first six miles on teak supports 20 feet in length, and afterwards on mimosa poles cut from the surrounding jungle, averaging not more than 12 feet. These were subsequently replaced by teak posts. From Komaylé to the end of the pass the line was necessarily carried close to the road, except where the spurs of the hills on opposite sides were close enough for the wire to be thrown in long spans from one to another. It was generally supported on mimosa posts, varying in different parts from 10 to 20 feet. Cut from the jungle as the line progressed, they were of course green, and, though sufficiently stout, warped excessively in drying. In a few places insulators were fixed to trees, and sometimes, as in the Sooroo pass, to the face of the cliff. By the time the telegraph was completed to Senafé, the first station in the highlands, the bamboo supports ordered from Bombay had reached Zoulla, but such was the scarcity of carriage that none could be spared to bring them up to the front. Subsequently I had about 700 brought up by native carriage for use in parts of the country where no timber of any sort was obtainable. For the remainder of the line from Senafé to Antalo, a distance of 130 miles, I was dependent on supports cut or purchased in the country. These were generally saplings of the juniper pine, from 10 to 15 feet in length, rarely exceeding three inches diameter at the base, and one at the top, and elastic as a fishing-rod. They were brought by the natives from considerable distances, and sold at prices varying from one to ten for a dollar. No insulators were used on this part of the line, the wire being simply passed through a notch in the top of the intermediate poles, and secured by three or four turns round the stretchers. Where the poles were exceptionally slight a tripod of three was formed to give stiffness enough to stretch to. The supports obtained in the country were placed from 40 to 60 yards apart, the bamboos from 80 to 100. On the latter the wire was generally inserted in a nick cut with a saw in the side of the bamboo, about a foot from the top. Stays or struts were seldom used, being unnecessary, except at very sharp angles, from the lightness of the wire.

It is evident that a line so slenderly constructed would be more than ordinarily exposed to damage; except at road crossings, the wire was rarely high enough to allow a loaded camel to pass below it, and was almost everywhere within reach of a mounted man.

Interruptions were thus very frequent, and the most constant vigilance and labour were necessary to keep open communication. The most fertile source of damage was undoubtedly the thieving propensities of the natives, which threats and remonstrances to the Chiefs proved of little avail to check. Next to this were the interruptions caused by our own baggage animals, which, when relieved of their loads, rubbed themselves against the poles, and often tore down furlongs of line in the vicinity of the halting places.

Besides the main line of telegraph from Zoulla to Antalo, a line, 10 miles in length, was erected for the use of the railway, and a supplementary wire was stretched through the pass between Komaylé and Undel, a distance of 25 miles.

The foregoing brief description will illustrate the following detail of the merits and defects of the various items of material and apparatus.

Copper wire.

For the main line, 350 miles of No. 16 W. G. copper wire were supplied by Messrs. Bolton and Sons, of Manchester. It was wound on wooden drums, in lengths of from 1 mile 1,000 yards to 1 mile 700 yards, the average length being 2,700 yards, and weight, including drum, 120 lbs.

The main line from Zoulla to Antalo and also the railway line were entirely constructed with this wire. For 60 miles from the coast only insulators were used, but nothing could have been better than the working over the remaining 140 miles, where not only was there no insulation, but where the poles were mostly green. Even in heavy rain no difficulty was found in working. Spans of 400 yards or more were stretched in many places and stood perfectly well. For facility of stretching and jointing, conductivity and portability, nothing could have been more satisfactory than this wire. An iron wire of even half the electrical advantage of the 16-copper wire would have been three times the weight, and, apart from the larger amount of carriage it would have required, could not have been supported on poles of such tenuity as those necessarily used. Inspectors on repairing duty, again, were able to carry with them several hundred yards of wire to replace possible thefts by natives; with heavier iron wire this, of course, could not have been done.

Altogether the selection of this copper wire was most fortunate, but it is not without its defects. First of these is its liability to stretch during the operation of straining. No great force is necessary to decrease the sectional area of the weakest part of the wire by one-half, with a corresponding diminution of strength and conductivity. This defect can only, of course, be obviated by constant care, and by straining in short lengths.

The second demerit of copper wire is similar, but less obvious. I was puzzled for some time to account for the way in which many stretches of wire, originally strained with a dip of a couple of feet between each pair of poles, gradually increased this dip, while, perhaps, stretches close by and under similar conditions remained in statu quo. After some time I found that, as long as the poles were left untouched, and exposed only to the force of the wind, the wire on them remains unhurt; but if the posts were shaken violently, by cattle rubbing against them or other such cause, the vibration communicated to the wire tended to elongate it, till it hung in festoons, several feet below the original position. This peculiarity necessitated frequent re-stretching in places where the supports were weak and exposed.

In the plain near Zoulla approach to the poles was successfully prevented by piling brushwood round their bases.

Wherever the wire was carefully paid out from the drum, so as to prevent any kinking, I do not believe that there was a single accidental break, except possibly at a maker's joint, which are always weaker, I imagine from overheating whilst soldering, than joints made in the field.

The joint used was the ordinary German or twisted joint; eight or ten turns being taken on each side. The ends were occasionally brought over and twisted together to prevent the possibility of the joint drawing out. No solder was used. The wire was stretched by hand on the ground wherever sufficiently level. Hedger's gloves were worn by the men stretching, as the thin wire often cut through the skin and caused painful sores. Where insulators were used, the wire was bound at every one. Much trouble arose from the insufficient strength of the drums on which the copper wire was wound to stand the terrible wear and tear of mule carriage. The great heat shrunk the wood and loosened the screws binding the heads of the drum to the spindle. Careless muleteers will not take the trouble to lift loads from their mules, but let them fall on the ground. The drum-heads thus constantly came off, and the wire became kinked and entangled, causing much trouble and delay in paying out. The drums on which the Hooper's core and homogeneous wire were wound suffered less, but were not altogether satisfactory. Cart carriage being unobtainable, drums for wire or core might, I think, be made of wrought iron, without being much heavier, although, of course, more expensive than those of wood. If time, expense, or other reasons prevent the use of wrought iron, a spindle of that metal should be supplied with each drum. This by means of a screw and nut at one end would bind the drum firmly together, and the two projecting extremities would be useful in packing the wire on the mule saddles.

Homogeneous iron wire.

Fifty miles of No. 15 galvanized homogeneous iron wire was supplied for use on short lines near the coast, should such be required. From trials made in London on samples of this wire, it appeared far tougher and stronger, in fact more adapted in every way but conductivity, for telegraphic purposes than the copper wire. In actual use, however, it proved far inferior. It was stretched only for the second line through the pass from Komaylé to Undel, a distance of 25 miles, and proved unequal in quality, difficult to stretch, even in short spans of 80 to 100 yards, and often was so brittle as to preclude the use of the German joint. I believe that this unsatisfactory result arose from overgalvanization. Where the tin coating was smooth and even, the wire was fairly tough and difficult to break by kinking, but in many places where the galvanizing was unequal and ridged, a second twist was hardly necessary to snap it.

Insulators.

In reporting on the material required for a field telegraph in Abyssinia, Major Champain recommended that a small proportion of insulators should be supplied for use in forest country, and to provide for the possible necessity of carrying the line through swampy regions. Under ordinary circumstances, a copper wire on bamboo supports would not require insulation. Two thousand bracket and the same number of spike insulators were accordingly obtained from Messrs. Siemens. These insulators were used only on the teak and mimosa supports between Zoulla and Senafé. Except for securing the wire to trees and rocks, they were of no great utility, and sometimes worse than useless, as the rough edge of the galvanized covering often cut the soft copper wire. This was particularly the case with the spike insulators, which, though intended for trees, proved useful only for rocks, the bracket insulator being better adapted for the former.

At first the wire was secured to every fourth insulator only, but it was afterwards found necessary to secure it to every one. The notch in the top of the insulator is thus useless.

For a single light copper wire, such as that used in Abyssinia, insulators are quite unnecessary, except for carrying the line through forest or along the face of a cliff, the latter being a necessity which would rarely arise. For forests the bracket form is undoubtedly superior to the hook and spike. The trees selected as supports are of course rarely, if ever, in a straight line, and thus the hook is pulled either inwards or outwards, so that the wire has not free play through it, and any advantage of a hook is lost. For tree work, therefore, I do not think that anything could be better adapted than the bracket insulator supplied for Abyssinia, substituting only a solid for the cleft head of that pattern. The method of fixing to the supports by means of straps answered admirably, but 50 per cent. extra nails and 20 per cent. straps should be supplied, the waste of both being considerable. For fastening wire to rocks, the spike insulator answered fairly, but the spikes were too short and of too soft iron. Steel spikes, two feet long, would have been of the greatest service. Wherever a shrub could be found growing out of the rock, the wire was attached to it instead of to an insulator, insulation being obtained by binding one or more folds of sheet india-rubber round the stem.

The method in which the insulators were packed was admirable. One hundred, with straps and nails, or spikes complete, were held in a stout wooden box, two of which formed a mule load. Each contained a complete set of tools and materials for fixing the insulators and stretching the wire, consisting of hammers, gimlets, files, cutting pliers, scissors, fine wire, twine, and emery paper, besides a couple of pieces of sheet india-rubber. Of these, however, the wire and files were not used. The empty boxes proved most useful for containing small stores, records, &c.

Hooper's core.

Fifty miles of Hooper's core was supplied for flying lines, to be laid upon the ground for communication in action or with outposts. This core consisted of a copper conductor of three strands, tinned over, and covered with several coats of india-rubber, prepared according to Hooper's patent. It was wound on wooden drums, in lengths of 700 to 880 yards, each weighing from 110 to 140 lbs. To have carried a portion only of this material with its equipment complete would have necessitated a train of at least one hundred mules, a number which could not have been spared from the more urgent requirements of the Ordnance and Commissariat.

The greater part of the Hooper's core was left, therefore, at Zoulla, the instruments intended for the flying lines being, moreover, required for the intermediate offices on the main line, which were required in far greater numbers than had been foreseen. A few drums of core had, however, been sent up to Senafé when first landed, and with these a line of about two miles was laid to the head of the pass. As far as insulation went it answered perfectly, but lying, as it did, day after day, along the high road, it proved an irresistible temptation to the natives, who managed to steal many yards daily without detection. It was therefore replaced as soon as practicable by an aërial line.

I have thus hardly had a fair opportunity of judging of the Hooper's core as a material for flying lines. All I can say is that neither the heat nor damp of Zoulla appeared to have in any way affected it. Its only fault seemed to be want of strength in the conducting wire. Five strands of similar dimensions to those used would have been preferable to three.

Paying-out carriages.

One pattern of carriage for paying out and picking up was used both for the large drums of core and the smaller of iron and copper wire. Twelve were taken out, seven or eight of which were used, and, with the exception of some of the minor fittings and of the woodwork of the wheels, were as perfect at the end of the expedition as when they left England. They were made at Messrs. Siemens' factory at Charlton, under Major Champain's superintendence, and answered the purpose for which they were intended perfectly. A model was sent to the Royal Engineer Museum at Chatham. On these carriages I can suggest no improvement, except that spare wheels and handles, in the proportion of a pair of the former and three of the latter, should be sent with each carriage.

Instruments and batteries.

Three descriptions of signalling and receiving apparatus were sent to Abyssinia. For the main or semi-permanent line eight relay instruments (with writers) were supplied by Messrs. Siemens. The same firm supplied twelve smaller recording instruments for the flying lines, on similar principles to the first, but without relays. Four magnetic instruments obtained from Messrs. Henley were also taken out. The last were only used on the short line of railway telegraph, where they did good work. Of their suitability for transmission of signals through long lengths of wire I am thus unable to speak, but they deserve a fuller trial, and their defect of non-recording is, I think, almost, if not fully, compensated for by their requiring no batteries. For aërial lines it might possibly be difficult to protect them from lightning, but for ground or buried lines I believe that magnetic instruments would, with complete signallers, prove preferable to all others.

To return to the signalling apparatus used on the main line. The larger instrument consists of a signalling key, ordinary relay and printing apparatus, and two vertical galvanometers, without translative connexions. Owing to the inability of the signallers sent from India to signal so as to print intelligibly, an inability caused by the fact of non-recording instruments being used in India, the printing part of the apparatus was not used in Abyssinia. Of the remainder, the relays, connexions, keys, and fittings generally were admirable, but the galvanometers were very defective. Their resistance was so great that from the first it was found necessary to cut them out of circuit for rapid working, and a very short time rendered them useless even as detectors. The smaller instruments were similar in construction, but had no relays, and simple horizontal galvanometers. These were infinitely better than the more elaborate detectors attached to the larger instruments, and I was compelled sometimes to detach them for use with the latter. Both, however, had the fatal defect of being very liable to injury during transport.

For all rough work, not only campaigning, but wherever instruments have to be carried on pack-saddles, or even on carts, over rough ground, galvanometers should be invariably detached, and several spare one supplied. The experience of Abyssinia only bears out what I had previously remarked in Persia, where the attached galvanometers gave constant trouble, and had often to be replaced by extemporized indicators.

As regards the working of the instruments, large and small, apart from the galvanometers, nothing could have been more satisfactory. Even the small field instrument, without relay, worked by a twelve-cell battery, sent and received satisfactorily through 120 miles of uninsulated wire. Translating connexions would, however, have been most useful on the larger instrument.

Batteries.

The batteries used were all those known as "Marie Davy's carbon and zinc," the acid employed being protosulphate of mercury. They were obtained from the same makers as the instruments. Each element consists of a carbon cell, covered with vulcanized india-rubber. This contains the protosulphate of mercury, reduced to a paste with water. In it is the zinc part, hollowed out to contain water, and prevented from touching the carbon by small wooden plugs. These elements were in sets of twelve and twenty-four for the lesser and greater instruments respectively, enclosed in teak boxes, the lids of which held india-rubber washers, to prevent leakage when closed during carriage. Each box held besides a syringe for charging with water and a tin of spare acid. For the relays of the large instruments, sets of six elements on the same principle, but square in shape and more powerful, were provided. All were sent out ready charged, but while the small round elements were found in perfect order on unpacking, the relay batteries were much deteriorated. Action to such an extent had set up in them that the zinc was already half eaten away, and, in fact, after working a few weeks, they became quite useless. The other batteries, though hardly coming up to the expectations formed of them, either as regards lasting powers or convenience, did very well, and, electrically speaking, left nothing to be desired. Their defects were, the necessity for recharging with water two or three times a day; the great care and time this operation required, a care which it was difficult to get signallers to take; and the rapid deterioration of the copper straps, caused by leakage while travelling, and the unavoidable spilling of water during recharging. It was supposed that the carbon parts would require renewal sooner than the zinc, and spare parts of the former only were taken out, but the contrary proved to be the case, as, towards the end of the campaign, many zincs had nearly corroded away, while the carbon parts remained almost unimpaired. Fresh protosulphate of mercury was required about every two months, more from wasting than from deterioration. Taking them altogether, I think they are the best batteries I have seen for field purposes. Had the elements been a little larger, it would have been an improvement; spare zincs and straps are also required, and the action of the acid on the pewter syringes is such as to make it unadvisable to carry the latter in the box with the elements.

A small chest containing a box of repairing tools for instruments, covered wire, earth-plate, Morse paper, and ink, accompanied each instrument. The addition of magnets only was wanted to make them complete.

Office stores.

For the offices on the main line tents complete were ordered from India, but were sent without floor-cloths or furniture, so these had to be improvised. Latterly, I used the tables and stools provided for the flying offices on the main line.

The stools were ordinary camp stools, of extra strong construction; the tables were simple planks of mahogany, the legs screwing into battens underneath. Not one of either was broken or needed repair after six months' work and some hundred miles of mule carriage.

Six india-rubber water-bags were taken out to carry water for the earth-wires of temporary offices. Although not much used for this purpose, they were most useful in taking out water to working parties. I was astonished at the amount of rough usage these bags stood without injury, even the terrible mimosa thorns seemed unable to damage them.

The globe lamps for burning oil were strong and useful, but a candle lamp would have been preferable.

Strong silver watches would also have been better than the portable clocks provided.

The small bivouac tents for the temporary offices on the flying lines were hardly used, but seemed well adapted for the purpose for which they were intended.

Line stores.

Crowbars were principally used for digging holes for s[illegible]ts. Twenty-four were taken out, but proof the [illegible]fficient, and I had to obtain others from [illegible]mitt[illegible]gineer Park. A portable forge for repairing these and other tools, and gr[illegible]nes for sharpening axes, were often much required. The ten American [illegible]s provided were invaluable, but insufficient in number. Of bill-books I h[illegible]d fifty, and most useful they were. The remainder of the line stores do not call for much remark, except the india-rubber boat, which, though never required for telegraphic purposes, the line of country traversed crossing no river, proved useful in surveying and sounding Lake Ashangi.

Stationery.

The stationery supplied only lasted out the campaign with great economy, with the exception of record books and message forms, of which ample remained. All was admirable in quality.

Stores for twenty miles of line on iron standards.

Early in January, when the difficulties of keeping open the first section of the line from Zoulla to Sooroo appeared insurmountable, owing to the damage done by the numbers of sick camels grazing in the jungles, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, at my recommendation, telegraphed to England for 200 iron standards, with twenty miles of iron wire and stores complete. By the time they arrived, the final march from Antalo on Magdala had commenced, and it was more than probable that the compaign would be brought to a speedy close. Moreover, the measures taken to guard and improve the line had had such effect that no interruption had taken place on the section in question for nearly a month. Again, all available labour was required for other purposes, and I therefore did not disembark the stores in question, which were sent on to Bombay. I am therefore unable to report on them.

Lime light apparatus.

No letter informing me of the despatch of the lime light apparatus reached me, and I only accidentally discovered its arrival, and then too late to get it up to the front in time for the operations before Magdala, where it might have been useful. On the return march, however, during a short halt at Senafé, I experimented with it, but from a defect in the apparatus, which there was not time to remedy, was unable to make sufficient hydrogen gas for a satisfactory trial. The system of obtaining this, viz., by passing steam through red hot iron filings, differed from that I had formerly seen (by acid), and, in spite of the difficulty of carrying acid, is, I think, inferior to that method for use on a compaign.

Photographic stores.

The only other stores which were at any time under my charge were the photographic and army signal stores. The former I, by direction of Major-General Sir Charles Staveley, then commanding in Abyssinia, gave over to Major Pritchard, R. E., a few days after landing.

Within a fortnight of arriving at Zoulla, I sent Lieutenant Morgan, R. E., who had charge of the signalling party, to Senafé, then the advanced post. My own more urgent duties in connexion with the telegraph did not permit me to join the head-quarters of the army, with which the signalling party remained throughout the advance on Magdala, where they did good service, and I am therefore unable to say anything regarding the stores. Lieutenant Morgan's melancholy death on the return march from fatigue and exposure deprives us of the interesting fruits of his experience; but the Non-Commissioned Officers of the signal party which has returned to Chatham, where the apparatus was prepared, will, I have no doubt, have much valuable information to communicate. I will only remark that the apparatus for signalling between ship and shore was not found necessary owing to the short distance separating the anchorage from the beach.

Bamboos.

Owing to the uncertainty as to whether timber for supports would be found in the country, Major Champain recommended that 10,000 bamboos should be supplied from India. I have already explained why so little use was made of these.

Teak poles of very good quality were substituted for a part of the bamboos, and most of the remainder were cut in half and jointed in Bombay to facilitate transport on pack animals. These jointed bamboos were a failure. The few that were taken through the country were carried by natives at a higher rate than those left entire, and the difficulty of fitting the tops and bottoms together was great. As simple supports they answered passably, but it was impossible to stretch on them. Had camel or mule carriage been available, the jointed bamboos would doubtless have been easier of transport than those left whole; other advantage they had none. Almost all were of excellent quality.

Disposal of material at the close of the campaign.

From Antalo to the Egypto-Abyssinian frontier, a distance of 140 miles, the wire was taken down and brought to the coast, the telegraph office at each halting place remaining open till the night before the march of the rear-guard. From the head of the Senafé pass to Zoulla, the wire had been secured to each insulator, and, therefore, from the great heat and rapidity of the march down, I was unable to bring away the line in the pass.

At my recommendation, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief directed that the army signal and lime-light stores should be returned to England, and the telegraphic material sent to Bombay, with the exception of the 20 miles permanent line which was required for use at Aden. But this had not been discharged from the ship which brought it, and as there was a large quantity of other material lying over it in the hold which would have taken much valuable time to remove, I acquiesced in the proposal of the Senior Commissariat Officer that it should be sent to Bombay. At this time also there was no means of sending the lime-light apparatus to England, except viâ Suez, and I therefore requested that it might be taken to Bombay for transshipment. The signalling stores which had been provided by the War Department remained in charge of the 10th Company, Royal Engineers, and were brought by them to England with their regimental baggage.

The telegraphic material was handed over to the Commissariat for shipment, and I directed Mr. F. Hervey, one of the Assistants sent me from India, to take charge of duplicate packing lists for communication to the authorities at Bombay.

Remarks on Military Telegraphy.

I now beg leave to submit a few remarks on the subject of telegraphs in warfare, suggested by the experience I have had the opportunity of gaining in Abyssinia.

A British army may possibly be again called upon to wage war in a barbarous country at a distance from its base of operations. To an officer called upon to superintend telegraphic communication on such an expedition, I believe that the record of my experience would be of much use; and even to a campaign in more civilized lands, wholly or partially provided with a system of telegraphs, many of my remarks will be applicable.

The subject naturally divides itself into two sections, construction and organization.

Construction of a military telegraph.

It may, I think, be taken as an axiom, that to supply the telegraphic wants of an army advancing on a line of communication more than 100 miles in length (i. e., that distance separating the advance column from the base), a double wire is absolutely necessary; for more than 200 miles a third wire, and so on. For an army wholly dependent on its base for supplies, as was the army in Abyssinia, I would add a second wire after the first 50 miles. One wire would be set aside for through traffic between base and head-quarters, with translating stations at the principal depôts; the other wire or wires would serve as means of communication between the minor stations, one of which should be at each halting place. A reference to the following table of the traffic on the telegraph in Abyssinia will show the difficulty of carrying on the work of an army with a single wire, and the large share of traffic contributed by the minor halting places.

It may here be mentioned that messages were rarely sent to the offices for transmission but between 10 A. M. and 10 P. M. I began by keeping the principal offices open at night, but soon found the uselessness of so doing, except when important messages for England were expected from the front.

The last month only (May) gives an adequate idea of the work which would have devolved on the telegraph had circumstances permitted its advance with the head-quarters.

From	January.	February.	March.	April.	May.	Total.
Zoulla	165	333	399	324	518	1,739
Komaylé	175	309	302	200	446	1,432
Sooroo	...	108	187	119	240	654
Undel	...	127	218	134	327	806
Ramayguddee	...	96	200	137	413	846
Senafé	...	146	370	250	507	1,273

Head Quarters	..	...	18	170	251	439
Total ...	340	1,119	1,939	1,525	2,925	7,848

Any one conversant with the details of traffic on a line of telegraph will see that a single wire much subject to interruptions would be quite inadequate to the transmission of so large a number of messages, averaging nearly 40 words each, exclusive of addresses and official instructions. The number would have been much larger had not restrictions been placed on the power of officers to use the telegraph. This was at first practically unlimited, but the privilege of signing messages for transmission was afterwards restricted to Commanding Officers and Officers of the Quarter Master General's Department. This limitation produced a marked diminution in the traffic (vide return, months March and April).

The next question for discussion is the description of line to be erected. This must, of course, vary to a certain extent with circumstances, but the line, if likely to be required for more than a few days, should be as strong as if intended to be permanent.

A telegraph on a line of communications is subject to more chances of injury than one through a similar country unoccupied by a military force. Camp followers are more mischievous and careless than ordinary travellers, and, apart from any hostile demonstrations, all the worst classes of natives may be expected to hang about the march of an army. The constant passage of troops does little to protect the telegraph, which should thus be constructed to stand as much rough usage as possible. Economy of carriage, if not of money, would, as a rule, prevent the use of iron standards and heavy wire, but except under the circumstances of total absence of wheel carriage, lighter material than No. 12 iron wire on strong bell insulators should not be used. For two or three wires I would not place the poles further apart than 70 yards, or 25 to the mile, with ordinary 18-foot poles. If the base of operations be on the sea coast, iron standards might be used with advantage for the first 50 or 100 miles.

About 20 to 50 yards from the road is the best distance for the line. Road crossings should be, of course, avoided as much as possible, and struts used instead of wire stays. If the march of the army to the front be so rapid as to prevent the erection of a substantial line to accompany it, a single flying line without insulators might be erected at the rate of 10 miles a day. A second working party working at half that rate would follow, insulating the first, putting up a second wire, and generally finishing the line.

When the telegraph material was prepared for Abyssinia our knowledge of the country to be passed through was insufficient, and all that could be done was to take out material adapted, as far as possible, to any circumstances; and for the erection of a line from Senafé onwards over the table land of Abyssinia, nothing could have been more suitable than the copper wire and bamboos supplied. But for communication between Senafé and the sea, I would have provided a double line of 60 miles supported on iron standards. Operations should have commenced at both places from Senafé with the light line to accompany the march of the army, and from Zoulla with the permanent line to connect Senafé, the base of operations in the highlands, with the sea.

Working parties must, of course, vary with the nature of the troops employed and the country. A company of native troops properly supervised can put up five miles a day of line over ordinary ground. To accompany the march of an army two companies working independently would be required.

Organization of a military telegraph.

With regard to the organization of a military telegraph, the first question that suggests itself is, under what department of the army should the telegraph be placed?

It may be expected that the "personnel," at all events of the higher ranks of the telegraph, will, as a rule, be furnished by the Royal Engineers, and the control of their operations would thus naturally fall to the Commanding Engineer. But the construction and maintenance of the lines are the only engineering part of the duties of a Telegraph Officer. The direction of lines, the organization and control of officers and traffic, are equally important, and have more in connexion with the Quarter Master General's, or Intelligence, than the Engineer, Department. In Abyssinia the control of the construction of the line was subordinated to the latter, but its direction, management, and traffic to the Quarter Master General. This arrangement, though no inconvenience arose from it in Abyssinia, would not, I think, work well in operations on a more extended scale.

It is now, I believe, proposed to place the control of the system of telegraphs in England under the Post Office, or rather to unite the Telegraph Department to be created with the postal. This system is, I venture to suggest, admirably calculated to promote the efficiency of both telegraphic and postal arrangements on a campaign.

The advantages of such an arrangement are many. In small stations, the necessity for double staff would be obviated; the postal duties, ordinarily entrusted to some officer who seldom willingly undertakes them and is liable to be removed at any time, could be easily and efficiently discharged by a telegraph clerk accustomed to the ordinary business routine of a telegraph office. In larger camps, the civilian Postmaster would better perform his work, under the supervision of the commissioned telegraph officer, who again would supplement and arrange much of his traffic through the post during interruptions, and would inspect both departments on his tours. Finally, both should be represented at head-quarters by a single chief, as director of communications, who should receive orders through the chief of the staff.

The flying telegraph for use in action and army signal department should be entirely separate, and subordinate to the Quarter Master General's Department.

The staff for an army telegraph I would therefore organize as follows:—

A director to remain at head-quarters, having control of postal arrangements, in addition to his telegraphic duties. Two, three, or four assistants, according to the length of line likely to be erected, in the proportion of one to every hundred miles. They should be military officers, if possible. The disadvantages of employing on a campaign civilians in positions necessitating constant official communication with officers of all ranks and departments are great and obvious, and I would prefer as an assistant a hard-riding subaltern of Engineers, though previously unacquainted with telegraph work, to a civilian, however well acquainted with his duties. It would, however, be desirable to have a civilian traffic manager at the base of operations, or with the head-quarters.

For the subordinate staff, if soldiers thoroughly qualified in the duties of telegraph clerks could be found, they would be preferable to civilians, but the training in the telegraph school at Chatham, though an admirable groundwork, does not qualify men for more than the manipulation and management of instruments. With the exception of two or three who had been employed as telegraph clerks before enlistment, none of the forty or more men of the Royal Engineers who have served under me in telegraph duty during the last four years were fit for the charge of offices on leaving Chatham, although a few months' experience thoroughly qualified most of them for independent charges. Better material could not be had, practice only was wanting, and this they have no opportunity of obtaining. If it should be desired to have a thoroughly trained body of military telegraphers fit to take charge of and work lines in a foreign country at a day's notice, some one or more of the public lines in England should be entirely managed and worked by the Royal Engineers. This would give a trained staff, which could be transferred, complete in organization and material, to a seat of war. Failing such, I should prefer civilian clerks, entrusting the conservancy of the line to trained Sappers. These should be mounted, and armed with a sword in a frog belt, and a revolver carried at the waist. The regulation equipment of the telegraphers of the Royal Engineers in Abyssinia was a source of constant annoyance to the men and of delay in the service. Even during construction, the heavy rifle and ammunition was much in the way, and on interruption and inspection duty was so irksome that the rifles were sometimes left behind, though against orders, and the men went out unarmed. This resulted in a corporal receiving three severe wounds, and losing his mules and baggage, on being attacked by natives.

A man cannot comfortably carry his rifle and ammunition when mounted, and to send men on foot to inspect and repair a long section of line is to expect impossibilities.

In conclusion I beg to submit a list of the total establishment I should think necessary for the construction and maintenance of a line of military telegraph, 200 miles in length, half of which a double line, with two terminal, three intermediate translating, and twelve minor and observation stations.

REPORTS OF WRECKS WHICH OCCURRED ON THE COASTS OF BRITISH INDIA DURING THE YEARS 1865 TO 1867.

WRECKS FOR 1865, BRITISH BURMAH.

Dated 4th August, 1868.

Note by LIEUTENANT COLONEL ALEX. FRASER, C. B., Royal Engineers.

In accordance with para. 6 of P. W. D. No. 060 C, dated 19th November 1866, a statement of wrecks and a chart indicating the positions of the same for the calendar year 1865 have been prepared.

2. The wrecks that occurred during the first four months of this year have already been reported on by Mr. Hope in his report for 1864-65; brief extracts relating to those wrecks will, however, be noted to render the report for 1865 complete.

Monthly table of wrecks.

3. The following statement exhibits the number of wrecks that occurred during each month of the year, together with their tonnage, number of cargoes, and loss of life and cargo:—

MONTHS.	No. OF WRECKS.	TONNAGE.	No. OF CARGOES.	CARGOES LOST.	LIVES LOST.
January	5	2,867	4	2	4
February	1	630	1	0	0
March	4	2,549	3	2	0
April	4	3,198	1	0	2
May	3	1,277	3	2	0
June	1	898	1	1	0
July	1	65	1	1	0
August	3	911	0	0	0
September	2	957	2	2	0
November	3	499	2	1	0
December	1	592	0	0	0

Tonnage.

4. The total tonnage given in this table does not accurately represent that of the 28 vessels wrecked, as the tonnage of four vessels is not given, viz., the Patamar Dustagury, Charles de Nantes, Anna, and a vessel, the name of which is unknown, wrecked off Pooree, but if the average for the vessels whose tonnage is given be assumed as approximate for the vessels above named, the total tonnage of vessels lost would be 14,443 + 2,400 = 16,843 tons.

Cargo.

5. The cargoes lost with these wrecks consisted chiefly of rice, timber, coal, and merchandise, the latter being usually classed as "general cargo." Ten vessels had no cargo, but were in ballast—seven cargoes out of 18 were saved. No value of cargo is given in any of the returns submitted by the different Governments and Administrations; no estimate therefore of the value of property lost can be given.

Loss of life.

6. Only 6 lives are reported to have been lost, but this cannot be considered accurate, as several returns omit to state whether lives have been saved or lost.

Discrepancy.

7. In Mr. Hope's report for the month of April three wrecks are given, while four have been reported; the Trumbull has been omitted, hence the discrepancy between the foregoing table and that of Mr. Hope's for that month.

Localities of wrecks.

8. The following table in the form of the first statement shows the number of wrecks that occurred off the different coasts:—

Though the largest portion of wrecks occurred off the coast of British Burmah, it is remarkable that none were caused from stress of weather, at least bad weather is not recorded as the cause of any of these casualties. The least number of wrecks were on the Madras Coast.

Cause of wrecks.

9. The following appear to be the approximate causes of the wrecks:—

From stress of weather	6
„ neglect or unskilfulness on part of those in command ...	6
„ unskilfulness or neglect of Pilots	2
„ mishaps	7
„ unknown causes	7
Total ...	28

Stress of weather.

10. The vessels wrecked from stress of weather were the Charles de Nantes, Stree Vencataswerloo, Alphonsine Isma, Lutchmeena, Princess Royal, and a vessel the name of which is unknown.

Cyclone.

11. In this year there is only one cyclone recorded which appears to have occurred on the Coromandel Coast at the end of November or in the early part of December. The Princess Royal while riding at anchor in the Madras roads was blown off dismasted to the eastern coast of Ceylon, where she became a wreck. Two other wrecks occurring off the same coast were from stress of weather; the remaining three wrecks from similar causes took place, one on the Madras Coast and two near the Bengal Coast.

Neglect or unskilfulness on part of those in command.

12. The six vessels lost from carelessness or unskilfulness on the part of those in command were the Angela Burdett Coutts, Taureau, Courier, Idas, Susannah, and Philamenie. The commander and chief officer of the Angela Burdett Coutts were punished by the suspension of their certificates for six months (vide proceedings of Madras Government, dated 27th June 1865). No proceedings of any Marine enquiry relating to the other vessels have been received. The Taureau, Courier, and Philamenie were sailing under foreign flags, and were, perhaps, not amenable to a British Marine Court, but an enquiry should have been made anent the loss of the Idas and Susannah, both British vessels wrecked off the coast of Burmah.

Unskilfulness or neglect of Pilots.

13. The Blondel and Margaret Davies were wrecked through neglect or unskilfulness on the part of the Pilots in charge; the former was wrecked on the Hastings Shoal in the Rangoon River in a fog; the latter was wrecked on Middle Point Bar in the Hooghly River.

Mishaps.

14. The seven wrecks from mishaps were the Lochee and Trumbull from fire—the Pattamar Dustagury, Jannovee Prosad, and Gopenath Prosad from being old and leaky, and the Sirocco and Gebroeda Hintman from inaccurate reckoning, owing to error in chronometers. "The Sirocco was bound from Rangoon to Colombo; she must either have turned in her course, which might have happened from error in her compasses, or must have drifted in a direction opposite to her course from the moment of leaving the outer buoy and when in full sight of land, or in soundings which ought to have guided her. In the same way the Gebroeda Hintman bound to Penang must have turned at right angles to her course;" (see Mr. Hope's report for 1864-65).

These two wrecks would appear to be more the result of carelessness on the part of their commanders than to what is alleged, viz., "error in chronometers."

Unknown or unreported causes.

15. No definite information has been given as to the cause of the seven following wrecks, viz., Sydenham, Str. Johnstone Castle, Lord Brougham, Glen Sannox, Ellora, Her Majesty's Steamer Hugh Lindsay, and Anna; with the exception of the last named vessel all the rest were reported by the Bombay Government.

Flags of vessels.

16. The only point remaining to be noted is the number of vessels sailing under each flag, viz.:—

Under British colors	17
„ French „	4
„ American „	3
„ Hamburgh „	1
„ Dutch „	1
„ Unknown „	2
TOTAL ...	28

Native vessels.

17. Out of the 17 sailing under British colors four were native vessels. It is, to say the least of it, a most extraordinary circumstance that there should be only four wrecks of native vessels returned, and that two of these should be old and leaky vessels. Considering the number of native vessels which are to be seen in every port, considering the state of unseaworthiness in which nearly all of these vessels are, and the utter ignorance of the persons in charge, of which I have seen many instances, it is impossible to suppose that only four of the whole have met with disaster during the year.

The native vessels represent the coasting trade of British India. It is observed from the wreck returns of Great Britain for 1866 that, of the total number of British sailing ships lost in that year which amounted to 1,804, no less than 1,308 were coasting vessels, leaving only 496 as over-sea vessels lost; of the 119 steamers lost, 92 were coasters and only 27 over-sea; and out of the whole number lost on the British Coasts of British and Foreign vessels in 1866, being 2,289 vessels with a registered tonnage of 427,000 tons, only 373 vessels were over 300 tons. In the return for British India for 1865 we have only four vessels returned, as representing the casualties to the coasting trade of British India in one year; the greater portion of the ships lost are of large tonnage and may be supposed to have good commanders, good crews, and all the adjuncts which modern science admits of to ensure proper navigation, while the old, rotten, leaky native vessels, which every observant person must see in every port, commanded by men of no knowledge and no experience and utterly indifferent to the comfort or safety of their crew or passengers, come off with a very small proportion of loss.

It is quite true that native vessels are not generally supposed to be employed during the dangerous part of the year, but it will be observed that no less than 21 wrecks out of 28 occurred during the time of the year when native vessels are at sea, and it must be concluded that either ignorance is better than science, or that the Government absolutely know nothing of what occurs to the coasting trade of the Empire, or to their native subjects who are employed on it.

Utility of wreck reports.

18. In the 13th para. of the Government Resolution No. 060C, dated 19th November 1866, the Governor General in Council considered that the chart which was submitted by Mr. Hope for me was not of much practical value; but the value of the chart and report was to be obtained from what was not in them rather than from what they contained, and the absence, almost total absence, of all returns of casualties to the coasting trade which we know to be very large is a matter for very grave consideration by a Government which professes to govern for the advantage of its native subjects.

In order to get at some idea of what the Indian native coasting trade really is, a return from every port on the coasts might be submitted showing (say on the 1st of every month) the number and tonnage of all native sea-going vessels in port on that date. But I should be sorry to have to work up these returns myself without an establishment for the purpose, and it is moreover (the preparation of such statistical information and the inferences to be drawn) a work that appertains to the Marine Department rather than to that of the Public Works.

Defective returns.

19. As a rule, the return of wrecks are very defective and would indicate that no interest or care whatever is evinced in their preparation, or any trouble taken to ascertain the exact position of a wreck. Madras forms the only exception; the returns sent in by that Government are carefully prepared and regularly submitted, and are very prompt in giving information when asked to do so, as in the case of the Angela Burdett Coutts.

WRECKS FOR 1866, BRITISH BURMAH.

Dated 6th August, 1868.

Note by LIEUTENANT COLONEL ALEX. FRASER, C. B., Royal Engineers.

The wreck statement for 1866 presents a great contrast to that of the previous year.

2. The number of wrecks with their corresponding tonnage are on the increase, and the loss of life and property comparatively considerable as will appear from the following statement of wrecks which occurred in each month, the total being compared with that for 1865 :—

Monthly Table of Wrecks.

Tonnage.

3. Of the 32 wrecks, the tonnage of one vessel lost near the Moscos, the name of which is unknown, is not given; if the average tonnage be assumed as that of the unknown vessel, the total tonnage would be 15,597 + 503 = 16,100 tons.

Cargo.

4. The 26 cargoes chiefly consisted of rice, timber, salt, coal, tin, specie, and sundries, out of which 16 cargoes appear to have been lost and 10 saved—six vessels were in ballast. The value of the cargo of the Monitor, which was wrecked off the Madras Coast, is given at Rs. 75,000; the other statements do not give definitely the value of cargo.

Loss of life.

5. The total loss of life is not correctly represented by 35, as several lives are stated to have been lost in the wreck of the Diamond off the Bombay Coast, the number of which is not stated, and therefore not included in the foregoing statement. It is also very possible that the unknown vessel wrecked off the Moscos may have lost all hands on board, so that the total loss of life is comparatively considerable this year.

Localities of wrecks.

6. The following table classifies the wrecks that occurred off the different coasts:—

Season for wrecks.

7. British Burmah, like the previous year, has the largest share of wrecks, and the Straits Settlements the least. On the coast of Burmah half the wrecks occurred during the north-east, and the other half during the south-west, monsoon. In this year, as a rule, the most of the wrecks, with the exception above noted, appear to have occurred during the south-west monsoon.

Causes of wrecks.

8. The following appear to be the approximate causes of wrecks :—

From stress of weather	5
„ neglect or unskilfulness on the part of those in command	11
„ ignorance or neglect of Pilots	1
„ mishaps	4
„ Unknown causes	11
TOTAL ...	32

Stress of weather.

9. The five wrecks from stress of weather were the Scotia, Diamond, Syed Ibrahim Bux, Moulmeenah, and Burmese Kattoo Shoey-bone Hla. The Scotia is reported to have sunk in a cyclone, 30 miles west of Calagouk near the Tenasserim Coast, on the 15th May. The Diamond encountered bad weather, got dismasted, became unmanageable, and drifted on to the rocks of Breach Candy near Ceylon. Several lives were lost with the wreck of this vessel, but the number is not reported. The Syed Ibrahim Bux and Moulmeenah were lost in a gale of wind; the former on Manalli Reef and the latter at a place called Bunpore to the south of Balasore; the Shoey-bone Hla was also wrecked in a gale of wind.

Ignorance or neglect of those in command.

10. No less than 11 vessels appear to have been wrecked from ignorance or carelessness of their sailing masters or officers on watch, viz., the Gertrude, Charles Julie, Steamer Siam, Eswaramoortee, Hydrose, Stafford, Chapman, Fortitude, Felix, Monitor, and Gem. In the case of the Gertrude the officer on watch was negligent, and the vessel sailed deliberately on to the Koldavelle beach; the Charles Julie, Eswaramoortee, and Gem were lost from ignorance of the direction and velocity of currents and the rise and flow of tides. The Siamese Steamer Siam was lost on the Alguada Reef while attempting to pass through the forbidden passage north of the reef, and this must have been a very deliberate thing, as it is understood that danger signals were hung out from the light-house. The Stafford and Chapman were lost near Bombay; the former ran on shore, doubtless from neglect of those on watch, and the latter miscalculated her position and neglected to use the lead. The punishment awarded to the commander of the Chapman was the suspension of his certificate for 12 months, and this is the only case in which punishment to a ship-master has been recorded. The Hydrose was a native vessel and lost through the incompetency of her Nacodah or commander. The Fortitude was lost apparently through the mutinous state of her crew, who reported their commander as being drunk. The Felix and Monitor were lost; the former from ignorance of position, and the latter by not using the lead when closely hugging the land.

Ignorance or neglect of Pilots.

11. Only one vessel, the Empress of China, appears to have been wrecked while in pilot charge, in the Maulmain River.

Mishaps.

12. The wrecks which may be attributable to accident or mishap were the Edouard, Juggernath Prosad, Dunkoomaree, and Concordia. The first-named vessel was wrecked at night on the Oyster Reef, and this combined with previous accidents to vessels would indicate the desirability of a light-house on that reef. The Juggernath Prosad and Dunkoomaree appear to have been old and unseaworthy native craft; they were leaky and encountering rough seas; they succumbed. The Concordia struck on some unknown rock near the Island of Ceylon.

Unknown causes.

13. It is a pity that the causes of no less than 11 wrecks have not been recorded in the wreck reports received; the remark on the greater part of them is "pending enquiry," but the result of these enquiries are, as a rule, not furnished. The monthly wreck returns would be more complete if they were delayed a few days by the submitting officers until this important information could be obtained. The 11 vessels lost from unreported causes are the Joadel Manaim, a Burmese Kattoo, and an unknown vessel off the coast of Burmah. The Steamers Jeddo and Maharaj, and the Zenobia, Vickerie, Themis, and Die Vernon, off the Bombay Coast, and the Rajpoot and Belgravia, off the Madras Coast. It would appear from the remarks in the returns of the last two vessels that the local Marine Authorities consider these wrecks the result of negligence, and have accordingly recommended that enquiry be made as to the real cause of their loss.

Flag of vessels.

14. The nationalities of the vessels wrecked are classed as under :—

British	26
French	3
Siamese	1
Unknown	2
TOTAL ...	32

Seven of these were native vessels.

Reports of wrecks.

15. There is little or no improvement as far as precise and useful information is concerned in the wreck returns submitted from the different Governments this year over those submitted for previous years; latitude and longitude is frequently omitted, as well as other important information; the Madras Government, however, as usual, make the returns accurately and carefully with all the information which has been required.

It is satisfactory to observe that there have been no wrecks on the Alguada Reef, or mouth of the Bassein River, since the light-house was built, with the exception of the small Steamer Siam, but this vessel must have been deliberately lost, and nothing can guard against wilful neglect except severe punishment. It will be interesting to observe in next year's returns whether the new light-house on Kenery Island off Bombay has had the anticipated effect in reducing the number of the casualties which have been very heavy off that port for the last two years.

WRECKS FOR 1867, BRITISH BURMAH.

Dated 11th August, 1868.

Note by LIEUTENANT COLONEL ALEX. FRASER, C. B., Royal Engineers.

The wrecks for 1867 are more numerous than those for the two previous years, being five more than 1866 and nine more than 1865, with a very considerable loss of life and property. The usual detailed statement of wrecks and chart of sites have been prepared.

Monthly table of wrecks.

2. The following table shows the number of wrecks that occurred in each month of the year, to the foot of which is attached the totals of the previous years for comparison:—

MONTHS.	NO. OF WRECKS.	TONNAGE.	NO. OF CARGOES.	CARGOES LOST.	LIVES LOST.

Total for 1867 ..	37	17,417	27	17	49
" " 1866 ...	32	15,597	26	16	35
" " 1865 ...	28	14,443	18	11	6

Tonnage.

3. The tonnage of the following vessels have not been given in the wreck reports, viz., the Fuzel Rohaman and Pleiades wrecked off the Andamans and an unknown vessel lost at Sandheads; if the average tonnage be taken as that of these three vessels, the total tonnage would be 17,417+1,536=18,953 tons.

Cargo.

4. The principal items of cargo lost were cotton, silk, grain, copper, timber, coal, specie, and sundries. Some of the reports give the value of cargo (as ordered by Government of India in para. 12 of P. W. D. No. 060 C, dated 19th November 866), which will be found in the detailed statement of wrecks, but in cases of partial loss of cargo the value of the portion lost is not given.

Loss of life.

5. The total loss of life given in the reports is 49, which does not include the number of lives lost in the Steamer Thunder, Light-ship Hope, and an unknown ship. All the lives on board of these three vessels are supposed to have been lost. The lives on board the Urno Purna Prosad and Charlotte are all reported to have been lost, save four belonging to the former and three of the latter. These wrecks have been reported by Bengal, and if a little trouble and enquiry was made, the exact number lost in these five vessels might have been ascertained: the Charlotte and Hope were Government vessels and the Marine Authorities must have had a register of the crew of these vessels. Similar information regarding the loss of life in the Steamer Thunder might have been obtained from the agents or owners of the vessel in Calcutta.

The loss of 49 lives were caused in the wrecks of the following vessels :—

Douglas ...	4
Eliza Bencke	14
Tirzah ...	7
Nineveh ...	15
Feroze Shah	9
TOTAL	49

The loss of many more lives would have been recorded for the two last-named vessels which were wrecked off the Andamans were it not for the timely assistance rendered those vessels by Her Majesty's Steamer Kwang Tung which was stationed at Port Blair at the time.

6. The particulars of the wrecks that occurred on the different coasts are briefly given in the following table :—

TOTAL ...	...		37	17,417	27	17	49

7. Madras and Bengal have the largest number of wrecks, the most of which occurred at the beginning of the north-east and the end of the south-west monsoon. The same period applies to the casualties which occurred off the Andamans and the Island of Periods of wrecks.

Ceylon. Burmah and Ceylon have the least, while none are reported for the Straits Settlements. In fact no returns are now sent from the Straits.

Cause of wrecks.

8. The following appears to be the approximate classification of the cause of wrecks:—

From stress of weather	22
„ neglect or unskilfulness on the part of those in command ...	3
„ ditto of Pilots	2
„ mishaps	10
TOTAL ...	37

Stress of weather.

9. The wrecks from stress of weather were the Vathanayaji and Northland, which were driven from their anchorage in squally weather, the former on to a coral reef near Ceylon, and the latter on the sands east of Long Island near Tenasserim. The Suttalingum, Arabistan, Pleiades, and Nineveh succumbed to squally weather, the last three-named vessels near the Andamans, and the two first named off Bengal and Bombay respectively. The Supermania Puravy was lost off Foul Point, Ceylon, owing to a strong current and rough sea which rendered her unmanageable.

Cyclones.

The remaining wrecks from stress of weather were due to two cyclones, the first of which appeared on the Madras Coast about the end of September and wrecked the Mercia, Eliza Bencke, Gallant Neill, Stree Vencataswerloo, Streenavasaloo, Dyrakee Dowlut Cauder Bux, and Maha Letchmy; the three first being in charge of European commanders, and the four last native crafts in charge of Nacodahs or Native commanders.

The second cyclone appeared on the coast of Bengal on the 1st of November and wrecked four steamers and three ships, viz., Steamers Mercury, Atlas, Interloper, and Thunder, and a vessel, name unknown, together with the Hope (Light Vessel) and Charlotte (Despatch Vessel). The three first mentioned steamers were tugs. The Thunder was a steamer of 593 tons bound from China to Calcutta and like the steamer Persia of 1864, the site of her wreck is not known; the Government Light vessel Hope appears to have shared a similar fate as the Steamer Thunder in losing all hands on board and is coincident with the loss of the Light Vessel Khrisna in 1864 which the Hope re-placed.

Ignorance or neglect on part of those in command.

10. There are, apparently, only three vessels that have become wrecks through ignorance or neglect of those in command, viz., the Abel Tasman which was wrecked on Byranagore Reef; this wreck, though it occurred nearer to Bombay than Madras, was reported by the latter Government; her loss appears to be attributable to the commander's ignorance of the direction and velocity of the current in the vicinity of the Laccadive Islands. The Douglas was lost through want of proper attention to the lead and carelessness of commander whose certificate was suspended for 12 months. The Fuzel Rohaman was an Arab vessel wrecked off Landfall Island, Andamans, from ignorance of position on part of her Native commander. This is the first year that wrecks have been reported from Port Blair.

Ignorance or neglect of Pilot.

11. Two vessels were lost while in charge of Pilots, viz., the Bombay near Bombay, and the Wizard King in the Maulmain River.

Mishaps.

12. The casualties under the head of mishaps were the Glenforth, Conqueror, Sahoal Hamed, Urno Purna Prosad, Donardun Prosad, and Kyanthagyee; these vessels became leaky and were abandoned by their crew. The Tar parted her cables and was drifted ashore. The United States' Steamer Sacramento was lost on a bank at the mouth of Kothapaulem River (which shoal is not marked on the chart), the weather being hazy at the time. This gun-boat was bound from Madras to Coconada at the time when she became a wreck. The Tirzah and Merchant Prince were lost at Bombay, the former by mistaking the new light on Kenery Island for the outer light ship, and the latter for mistaking the same new light for the one on Colaba. The loss of these two large vessels show the absolute necessity there is for having, where there is more than one light, a proper system and distinct characters for the lights; nothing requires more thought and care than this, and no new light should be allowed to be put up without the authority of the Government of India, given after consultation with some competent officer or officers. People are often in a great hurry to get a light-house, but there is nothing which requires more consideration, or upon which more may depend, and no project of the kind should ever be passed hastily.

Flags of vessels.

13. The following are the nationalities of the vessels that were wrecked :—

Of these vessels 15 were native crafts.

14. The most of the returns are very imperfect, excepting those from Madras and Bombay. Only one return is accompanied with a chart illustrative of the site of the wreck of the Burmese Kattoo Kyanthagyee, and that has been sent up by Mr. T. Shepherd, the Deputy Commissioner of Mergui.

15. It will again be observed that, although more native crafts are reported as wrecked, some two-thirds of the whole have been lost by their unseaworthiness or by the ignorance of the masters (Nacodahs

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT.

ANNUAL REPORT ON THE OPERATIONS OF THE POST OFFICE OF INDIA FOR THE YEAR 1867-68.

No. 2168, dated 14th September, 1868.

From—A. M. MONTEATH, Esq., Director General of the Post Office of India,
To—The Secretary to the Government of India, FINANCIAL DEPT.

I have the honor to submit a report on the administration of the Post Office of India for the official year 1867-68.

2. Before proceeding to give the usual statistics respecting the working of the department, I shall notice briefly a few of the more important events of the year.

NEW CONTRACT WITH THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY, AND ENHANCEMENT OF THE RATE OF POSTAGE ON OVERLAND CORRESPONDENCE.

3. The necessity for an alteration in the postal services between India and Europe had for some time back formed the subject of correspondence between this office and the Government of India, and between the Government of India and the Secretary of State; but it was not till towards the close of the year under report that arrangements were made for commencing a weekly mail service between Bombay and Europe. It is unnecessary here to detail the various points connected with the new contract, which have since formed the subject of correspondence, but it may be stated generally that objections were taken to the share of the cost proposed to be laid upon India, and particularly to those items representing the cost of the services between Bombay and Galle and between Calcutta and Galle, which had been included in the general contract, not because India required them, or was willing to pay for them, but because the Peninsular and Oriental Company represented the necessity of such lines as commercial adjuncts of the main lines. The question of the distribution of the cost of the several lines of communication among the countries interested in their maintenance has an obvious bearing upon the question of the postage rates to be charged on correspondence sent by the various lines, and the fact of a considerable increase having been made in the postage charge on correspondence between India and the United Kingdom made it all the more necessary to examine carefully the proposed distribution of the subsidy payment. It seems unlikely that, with a proper distribution of the subsidy payment, there will be any necessity for maintaining the present enhanced rates of postage.

4. The new contract with the Peninsular and Oriental Company contained provision for the supply, without extra charge, of accommodation for sorting the mails on board, and of free passages for the sorters. The introduction of sea-sorting on the Bombay and Suez Line was accordingly proposed and sanctioned by the Government experimentally for one year. This measure did not actually commence till after the year under report, and the results will therefore be more appropriately noticed in my next report.

LOCAL STEAM SERVICES UNDER CONTRACT WITH THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

5. A brief notice may now be taken of the local steam services under contract with the British India Steam Navigation Company. These services may be enumerated as follows, viz.:—

(1). Calcutta, British Burmah, and the Straits.

(2). Bombay, Kurrachee, and the Persian Gulf.

(3). Calcutta, Bombay, and intermediate ports on the east and west coasts.

(4). Madras, Rangoon, and intermediate ports on the west coast.

6. The contract for the first of these services expired in September 1867, and was provisionally continued pending a settlement of the expected changes in respect of the Europe mail service, the only modification being an increase in the contract speed from 7 to 7½ miles per hour, and a reduction of the subsidy from Rs. 17,000 to Rs. 16,000 per mensem. In April last a new arrangement was made, providing for a fortnightly communication with Chittagong, a weekly communication with Akyab, Rangoon, and Moulmein, and a monthly communication (since changed to once every four weeks) with the Straits. The subsidy paid for this service is now Rs. 21,333 per mensem, of which Rs. 1,083 are paid by the Straits Government.

7. The contract for the service between Bombay, Kurrachee, and the Persian Gulf also expired in 1867, and was renewed on the same general footing except that the vessels proceeding to and returning from the Gulf were required to touch at Kurrachee, and that power was reserved to require the trips, both to Kurrachee and to the Gulf, to be made once a fortnight instead of twice a month, on payment of a proportionably increased subsidy. This power was made use of on the commencement of the weekly overland mail, and the service is now performed weekly to Kurrachee, every alternate vessel proceeding on to the Gulf. The subsidy paid is Rs. 23,111 per mensem.

8. Neither of the other two services (viz., Bombay, Calcutta, and intermediate ports, and Madras, Rangoon, and intermediate ports) underwent any alterationin the year under report. They were both monthly services, the subsidies being Rs. 7,500 and Rs. 6,000 per month respectively. Since the close of the year under report, the Bombay and Calcutta service has been changed into a fortnightly one, the subsidy payable being increased from Rs. 7,500 to Rs. 10,000 per month.

MODIFICATIONS OF POSTAL ESTABLISHMENTS, &c.

9. I now proceed to notice briefly some important modifications of establishment proposed during the year under report, some of which were actually introduced therein.

10. The five Post Masters General (Bengal, Madras, Bombay, North-Western Provinces, Punjab) were classed in two grades, three being in the lower grade, with salaries of Rs. 1,500 per month, rising by annual increments of Rs. 50 to Rs. 1,750 per month, and two in the higher grade, with salaries of Rs. 1,750 per month, rising by annual increments of Rs. 50 to Rs. 2,000 per month. The two officers of the higher grade will ordinarily be attached to the Bengal and Bombay Circles, drawing, in addition to the salary abovementioned, a house-rent allowance of Rs. 200 per month.

11. The salary of the Compiler of Post Office Accounts was also changed from a fixed amount of Rs. 700, with an extra allowance of Rs. 100, to a sliding scale commencing at Rs. 800, and rising by yearly increments of Rs. 50 to a maximum of Rs. 1,400 per month. This revision was necessary owing to the greatly increased responsibility of the office, consequent on changes in the system of audit and account, and was, moreover, a well-merited acknowledgment of the services of the present incumbent.

12. The central account office was also strengthened, principally in what is called the check branch, i. e., the department in which the postage shown by the sending Post Office as due on its despatches is checked with the accounts of the receiving Post Office. This system of check had only been commenced in recent years, its operations being restricted to a limited number of offices by way of experiment, and the results were such as to make the extension of the system a matter of clear expediency.

13. The salaries of the Chief Inspector of Post Offices in the Central Provinces, as well as of the Presidency Post Masters of Calcutta and Bombay, were changed from a fixed rate of Rs. 700 per month to a sliding scale, commencing with Rs. 600 per month, and rising by annual increments of Rs. 50 to Rs. 1,000 per month.

14. The Inspectors and Superintendents of Mail Carts were divided into three grades, the lowest or probationary grade carrying a fixed salary of Rs. 150 per month, the second grade having a salary commencing at Rs. 150 and rising by yearly increments of Rs. 30 to Rs. 300, and the third or highest grade having a salary commencing with Rs. 300 and rising by yearly increments of Rs. 40 to Rs. 500. Supernumerary Inspectors were provided at the head-quarters of each of the main circles, viz.,—Bengal, Madras, Bombay, the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab, so as not merely to provide for temporary vacancies, but to be available for deputation on special duty to any part of the province. A supernumerary Inspector was also attached to the central account office in Calcutta. Four additional Inspectors' divisions were also created. The additional strength thereby given to the inspecting establishment (ten officers in all) was much needed, for the rapid extension in late years of postal operations had made it quite impossible for the former establishment to supervise its working.

15. A revised and more liberal scale of travelling allowances for Inspectors (as well as for other grades of officers) was also introduced experimentally during last cold weather, and the results will be useful in framing a scale for permanent adoption.

16. Attention was also paid to the establishment of Sub-Inspectors, the necessity for whom has arisen from the transfer in some provinces of the control of the district post, and from the great increase in the number of small offices and branch lines in the interior of districts.

17. In Bombay, where the district post is under the control of the Post Master General, there are 14 Sub-Inspectors, whose pay is charged as an item of district post expenditure. They were formerly on salaries of Rs. 50 each per mensem (two out of the whole number being on Rs. 60 per month) without any travelling allowance; and they were placed during the year under review on salaries of Rs. 50, rising by yearly increments of Rs. 5 to Rs. 75 per month, a travelling allowance of Rs. 2 per diem while on the march being also authorized.

18. In the North-Western Provinces, where also the district post is under the control of the Post Master General, there were formerly 21 Sub-Inspectors, paid from the district dâk fund, but being on wholly insufficient salaries they were found to be almost useless, and their place was consequently taken during the year under review by 16 Sub-Inspectors on Rs. 60 each, with travelling allowances, paid by the imperial post.

19. In the Punjab there were only 3 Sub-Inspectors employed in divisions where the number of small offices was particularly large. Three more were added during the year under review for the Punjab, and 3 for Sindh (which is part of the Punjab Circle) in connection with an experimental measure for collecting and delivering letters in the districts by means of rural messengers.

20. Two Sub-Inspectors were allowed, one in Bengal and one in Madras, for looking after the district postal operations in the two districts where those operations were experimentally placed under the control of the imperial post (see paras. 48 and 49).

21. In the report for 1865-66 it was mentioned (para. 48) that the office establishments of the Post Offices in the Bombay and Madras Circles had been revised, more liberal salaries on a scale rising by length of service being allowed to the Post Masters, Deputy Post Masters, and Clerks. A proposition contemplating a similar revision of the office establishments in the other circles was submitted during the year under report, but it did not receive sanction till after the close of the year.

22. A proposition was also submitted for revising the numbers and pay of the delivery peons throughout the entire country (excepting the presidency towns and a few other places where special rates prevailed), the minimum salary being fixed at Rs. 6-8 per month, rising by annual increments in five years to Rs. 9, with a higher grade on salaries rising from a minimum of Rs. 9 to a maximum of Rs. 12. This proposition also did not receive the sanction of Government till after the close of the year under report.

23. I hope that the revisions above referred to will in future years result in greater efficiency. Two marked causes of present inefficiency are (1), the obtuseness and carelessness of office establishments, especially of the establishments of sorting offices; and (2), the badness of the delivery agency. There are, it is true, circumstances which render it most difficult to attain efficiency in the sorting and delivery of letters in India, where more than 20 different languages are used, where the letter-writing population is to a large extent not stationary, where the addresses on letters are so frequently illegible and generally imperfect, where houses even in large towns are not numbered, and where the only available agency is defective in education; but I freely admit that with all these drawbacks, the Indian Post Office is as yet far from what it might be. The attempts to improve it have involved, and will for years to come involve, additional outlay; but something more than mere outlay is required, in the shape, principally, of more careful inspection of offices, more attention to the instruction of subordinates in the duty required of them, and a vigilant supervision of the working of the department in all its branches.

TRANSMISSION OF CURRENCY NOTES BY POST.

24. There is one point which I ought especially to advert to as affecting seriously the efficiency of the department, and that is, the great and growing use made of the Post Office as a means of transmitting currency notes. Ever since the introduction of the currency note system this practice has been on the increase, and with it there has been placed in the way of the Post Office establishments a strong temptation to dishonesty, for the public too frequently neglect the precaution of sending only half notes and awaiting an acknowledgment before transmitting the other halves, or of registering the letters, or even of placing the currency notes in good substantial covers. The fact that the tampering with covers in transit by post extends not merely to covers containing whole currency notes, but to covers containing half notes as well as to those which may be supposed to contain notes, shows how necessary it is to take some remedial steps both for the security of the mails and for the avoidance of a temptation tending so much to the demoralization of the Post Office establishments. Since the close of the year under report, I have proposed the adoption of the English system of compulsory registration in respect of covers containing coin or currency notes, all such covers which may be dropped into the letter box without registration being registered and charged with a double registration fee on delivery. Perhaps, also, when increased limits of weight are allowed for the several rates of letter postage (of which there is now an early prospect), the native public may take more generally to the use of a substantial and less transparent kind of paper. I cannot say that I am very sanguine of this result, for so long as a thin flimsy paper can be purchased at less cost, it will continue to be used to a large extent by the native public in preference to thick paper; but if the increased limits of weight have the effect of inducing, though gradually, a more general use of thick paper, it will be a great benefit to the Post Office.

LOCAL POSTS IN THE TOWNS OF CALCUTTA AND BOMBAY.

25. During the year under report local posts were established in Calcutta and Bombay, the distribution of letters direct from the General Post Office being superseded by an arrangement under which the mails were collected at, and delivered from, branch offices, the several branch offices being placed in direct communication with each other as respects local letters.

26. In Bombay the arrangement worked exceedingly well, as will be seen from the following extract from the Post Master General's report, viz.:—

"A system of six daily local deliveries has been introduced in the island of Bombay, and with such success that after an experiment of eleven months, the number of letters posted for delivery in the city and suburbs during one month has risen from 7,932 to 20,096, while the nine branch offices in Bombay have yielded an average monthly income of Rs. 17,815 against a cost of Rs. 2,659, leaving a net monthly profit of Rs. 15,156."

27. In Calcutta the experiment proved a failure, the main causes being the inability of the Deputy Post Masters of the branch offices to control the delivery peons (who in Calcutta are chiefly Mahomedans, of a class requiring a strong controlling hand over them), and the difficulty of getting the public to include the names of the local districts in the addresses of their letters. In Calcutta there are no well known names for the different districts of the city, and the public would not make use of the artificial designations given to them on the principle adopted in London. The local post in Calcutta, as originally tried, had therefore serious difficulties to contend with, and, as already stated, proved a failure, giving rise to many just complaints from the public. The system was therefore altered in November last, a direct delivery from the General Post Office of all outside letters being reverted to, and the local deliveries confined to such pre-paid local letters as might be posted with full addresses. This system has worked moderately well, but the public have not as yet made much use of it, the number of local letters delivered being only about 3,000 per mensem. The number of chuprassies entertained by residents, public offices, and houses of business in Calcutta, has probably something to do with the limited use made by them of the local post, but a good local delivery ought in time to supersede the use to so large an extent of private messengers.

NEW SYSTEM OF TREATING OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

28. In paragraph 7 of the last report it was stated that the Government of India had sanctioned the complete introduction of the new system of treating official correspondence, but difficulties were subsequently raised on various points, and particularly respecting the application of the system as intended to the local district correspondence. I have not yet arrived at a quite satisfactory conclusion respecting all the points involved, and think it best to make no change until a scheme can be matured which will meet all requirements.

STRAITS SETTLEMENT TRANSFERRED FROM INDIAN CONTROL.

29. It may be mentioned here that from the commencement of the year under report, the Straits Settlement, including the seaport towns of Singapore, Penang, and Malacca, ceased to be under the control of the Government of India. The postal transactions of the new colony are not, of course, included in the returns of the present year, and in comparing them with the returns of the previous year, I have in respect of the more important statistical statements shown the results of 1866-67 both inclusive and exclusive of the figures relating to the Straits Settlement.

OTHER POINTS TO BE NOTICED IN SUBSEQUENT PARAGRAPHS.

30. There are other remarks to be made relative to the employment of rural messengers, the management of the district post, the resumption of bullock train operations, and the general financial results of the year, but, as these fall appropriately under one or other of the usual heads of remark, I need not enter upon them in this place.

31. I now proceed to give the usual statistical information respecting the working of the department, under the same heads as those adopted in previous reports.

SECTION I.—POST OFFICES AND LETTER BOXES.

32. The number of new Post Offices and Letter Boxes opened during the year in each circle will be found in Appendix No. I, of which an abstract is given on the margin. The number of new Post Offices opened this year is greater than the number opened in any previous year. Out of the whole number of 467 new offices, no less than 178 were opened in the Bombay Circle. All new offices are placed on an experimental footing for the first six months, and are not permanently sanctioned unless the revenue, calculated on a liberal principle, is sufficient to defray the cost. A large proportion of these new offices are on a very inexpensive footing, many of them being in charge of village school-masters, who receive small allowances for discharging postal duties. I admit that the multiplication of small offices of this kind, superintended by officials whose qualifications are in most cases of a very low order, has its evils as well as its advantages, for it increases the number of irregularities resulting from ignorance and stupidity, but at the same time there can be no doubt that the advantages far outweigh the evils, for it is only by bringing the Post Office to the doors of the native population that a free resort to it can be expected.

33. The number of Letter Boxes opened is not so large as in the previous year, and of the whole number (134) the majority belong to Bombay (80) and to Bengal (40). The Post Master General of Bombay has noted the great use made of Letter Boxes on the Great Indian Peninsula and Baroda Railway Lines, the number of letters posted therein during a single month having been 4,998 for the Great Indian Peninsula Railway and 9,031 for the Baroda Railway. In Madras, although there is no Railway Travelling Post Office, a plan has been introduced of attaching Letter Boxes to the Mail Guard's compartment, and the results have been most satisfactory, the number of covers posted in these boxes during the year having been 123,648 for the Madras Railway, and 8,578 for the Great Southern of India Railway.

34. Efforts have also been made to extend the benefits of the Post Office by employing what are called rural messengers, i. e., agents who visit the different villages according to prescribed routes for the purpose not only of delivering, but also of collecting, letters. A rural messenger is required to visit each of the villages in his circuit for the purpose of collecting letters, even if he has no letters to deliver, and in proof of his visit he is required to show in his book the signature of the putwaree or other recognized village official or resident. Each rural messenger is supplied with a bag or box, having a locked compartment, in which letters can be posted, the key of the compartment remaining with the Post Master of the office to which the messenger is attached, and he is also required to carry about with him for sale a supply of postage labels. I have given the above brief description of the duties of rural messengers, because the system has been made use of during the year under report to a much larger extent than formerly, and because I look to it as one of the best means that has yet been devised of bringing the benefits of the Post Office to the doors of the rural population.

SECTION II.—POSTAL LINES.

35. The total length in miles of each class of postal lines is given on the margin, with the corresponding statement for the preceding year: the details for each circle will be found in Appendix No. II. The increase in railway line mileage is composed of extensions from Cawnpore to Lucknow (Oudh and Rohilcund Railway), from Allahabad to Jubbulpore (East Indian Railway), from Ghazeeabad to Meerut (Punjab Railway), and from Caroor to Erode (Great Southern of India Railway). The increase of 289 miles of mail cart or horse dâk is the net result of various reductions and increases, viz., the abolition of the lines from Cawnpore to Lucknow, from Mirzapore to Jubbulpore, and from Caroor to Erode, caused by railway extensions, and the extension or additions of lines from Titalya to Siligoree (Darjeeling Line), Agra to Jeypore, Meerut to Kaladoongo (Nynee Tal Line), Cawnpore to Jhansie, and Rawul Pindee to Kohat. No extension of mail cart took place in Bombay during the year under report, but very shortly thereafter two additions were made by the substitution of a Tanga dâk between Poona and Ahmednuggur for a previously existing runner line, and by the opening of a temporary hill cart dâk between Kowta and Mahableshwur.

SECTION III.—CORRESPONDENCE.

36. The correspondence returns of the year for each circle are given in Appendix No. III, and the results for the whole of India are abstracted on the margin. Under all heads there is an increase. The increase in the number of letters (6·22 per cent.) is not quite so large as last year (7·61 per cent.), but under the other heads the increase is larger during the last than in the previous year. The smaller rate of increase under the head of letters is entirely due, as will be seen from the details given in paragraph 39, to the diminished number of service covers, the reduction in service covers during the year under report being considerably larger than the reduction in the previous year. The fact that the revenue from private correspondence shows (vide para. 67) a larger increase for this year than for previous years is the best evidence of the development of private correspondence.

NOTE.—The returns of 1866-67 are for 12 months calculated on the average of 11 months.

37. In my last report (for 1866-67) I noticed that for some years back the number of parcels transmitted by post had been decreasing, owing to the order of Government prohibiting the conveyance by post of parcels passing between stations connected by railway. The year 1866-67 showed for the first time during recent years an increase in the number of parcels, and the year now under report exhibits a similar result. This is probably due to the extensions of railway during the two years in question having been of no great amount or importance. When a junction is effected between two great lines or sections of railway, an immediate stop is put to a large parcel traffic between the stations of one section and those of the other. In a recent report to Government, I endeavoured to show that the prohibition above referred to might unobjectionably be withdrawn, as it is only in respect of very small parcels that the Post Office really competes with the railway, the railway rates for large parcels being considerably lower than those of the Post Office.

38. The increase in the number of book-packets is very large. It was large in the previous year (9·58 per cent.), but still larger in the year now under report (19·39 per cent.). As noticed last year, this result is doubtless due to the fact that, under the Postal Act of 1866, the previously existing restrictions respecting the articles which might be sent by book post were removed.

39. The letter returns may be further analyzed as per margin. As observed in the report of last year, it is necessary to explain that the comparatively large increase under the head of "paid" letters arises from the inclusion of service covers prepaid by service postage stamps. The new rules for the treatment of official correspondence came into force in the middle of 1866-67, so that the returns of that year showed only half the effect of the measure, the other half being shown in the present returns.

40. The increase in the number of registered letters was last year 11·56 per cent., which was stated to be considerably below that of any of the preceding years. The increase this year is still less, being only 5·87 per cent.

41. The correspondence received was disposed of as shown in the following statement, viz.:—

Directly delivered (Appendix III) 83 per cent.	51,839,887
Retained for re-issue 17 per cent. .	10,727,368
	62,567,255

Remainder disposed of by re-direction to other offices, or sent to branch offices, or in deposit at the end of the year	4,167,818
	10,727,368

The proportion of letters shown as "retained for re-issue" has largely increased during the last two years, owing to the creation of branch offices, the letters for which are now shown as receipts of the head office.

42. The number of articles mis-sent in each circle is given in Appendix No. IV. The results for the whole of India compared with those of the preceding year are as follow:—

	Number of Letters, Papers, and Parcels mis-sent.
1866-67 (11 months)	67,745
1867-68	71,812

In noticing the large increase of articles mis-sent in the report of the previous year, I observed that the returns of mis-sent articles had formerly been entirely unreliable, owing to the fact that each office was supposed to report the number of articles mis-sent by it. A change under which the reports were made, not by the offices which had committed the errors, but by the offices receiving the mis-sent articles, raised the reported number from 31,588 in 1865-66 to 67,745 (for 11 months = 73,903 for 12 months) in 1866-67. I believe that the returns of mis-sent articles, although more correct than formerly, are still very far from complete. They may be approximately correct as respects mis-sent articles received for delivery at the wrong office, but they are probably very incomplete as respects articles mis-sent to a sorting office. It is obviously an important object to obtain reliable returns of mis-sent articles, and attention will therefore be directed to the matter.

43. Appendix No. V contains details of the working of the dead letter offices at Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Agra, and Lahore. The results of the last three years are compared below in the usual form, viz.:—

	Number.			Proportion of each class to the whole.
	1865-66.	1866-67, for 11 Months.	1867-68.	1865-66.	1866-67.	1867-68.

Total	1,635,444	1,611,940	1,779,248	100·	100·	100·

It will be observed that the proportion of letters returned to the senders is considerably more than that of the previous year.

44. The returns of postage stamp sales are given in Appendix No. VI, and it will be observed that for the purpose of comparison, I have shown the returns of the preceding year both inclusive and exclusive of the Straits Settlement, which, as already noticed in para. 29, ceased to have connection with the Indian Post Office at the commencement of the year under report.

45. The increase in the gross value of stamps sold in 1867-68 as compared with 1866-67 (deducting the sales in the Straits Settlement), is 4·78 per cent., against a corresponding increase of 3·4 per cent. in the previous year. The increase and decrease in the sales of the several classes of labels is given below :—

	8-Pie Labels.	4-Anna Labels.	1-Anna Labels.	2-Anna Labels.	4-Anna Labels.	6-Anna Labels.	6-Anna 8-Pie Labels.	8-Anna Labels.	½-Anna Note Paper.	½-Anna Envelopes.	1-Anna Envelopes.

* This was a temporary label, since discontinued.

The reduced sales of 8-pie, 4-anna, and 8-anna labels are probably entirely due to the extended use of 6-anna 8-pie labels for overland correspondence. The increased sales of ½-anna note paper and 1-anna envelopes were caused by the efforts made during the year to get rid of the large surplus stock on hand, by exposing it more freely for sale.

46. The returns of the sale of service stamps are given in Appendix No. VIA. The gross value of service stamps sold in the year under report is Rs. 3,18,169, against Rs. 3,03,031 in the previous year. The increase is due to the fact that the sale of service stamps did not commence till some months after the beginning of the previous official year.

SECTION IV.—DISTRICT POST.

47. In my last report I explained briefly the position of the district post in relation to the imperial post, observing that it consists of lines of communication connecting the head-quarters of each district with the interior police and revenue stations, and is maintained primarily for the purpose of conveying official correspondence, the expense being met in some parts of the country from the proceeds of a special cess levied for the purpose, and in other places forming a charge on the general revenues.

Originally, the district post throughout India was managed by district officers or other local officials quite independently of the imperial post, but within the last few years the management of district post establishments in Bombay and the North-Western Provinces was transferred to the officers of the imperial post. This measure was not an incorporation of the district post with the imperial post, but a mere transfer of the management of the former, the Post Master General undertaking to relieve district officers of the control of the establishment, and acting, quoad his new office of manager of the district post, under the orders of the local Government. The advantage of this change was particularly noticed in the Administration Report of 1865-66, and endeavours have since been made to obtain from other local Governments a similar transfer of management.

48. The consent of the Madras Government was obtained to an experimental transfer of the management of the district post in one district (Trichinopoly), and the results having been satisfactory, application will be made for a similar transfer in other districts.

49. A similar experiment was made in respect of one district in Bengal (the 24-Pergunnahs), and in this case also the result has been good, as will be seen from the following extract from the Post Master General's Report, viz. :—

"With the permission of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, the control of the district post in the 24-Pergunnahs was taken over as an experiment by the imperial Post Office in October 1867. The result has been all that was expected; the number of letters in the General Post Offices in the district has increased nearly double; regularity in the receipt and despatch of letters has been ensured; and the speed of the mails has been increased "from 1½ and 2 miles an hour to 4½, and even to 6 miles on some of the lines."

Steps will be taken for extending the measure in Bengal. There is perhaps no province in India where improvement in the district post arrangements is more urgently called for than in Bengal.

50. In the Central Provinces the entire district postal arrangements have, during the year under review, been placed under the management of the officers of this department, and, although the measure was only carried out in the latter part of the year, there has been a large increase in the amount of correspondence sent to and received from the district post.

51. In the Punjab steps have been taken, with the permission of the Lieutenant Governor, towards the same object; but the arrangements have not yet been completed.

52. In the province of Oudh objections are still entertained by the civil authorities to the transfer of the management of the district post to the officers of this department. I admit that the fact of the postal jurisdiction of Oudh being under the Post Master General of the North-Western Provinces may constitute an objection to the transfer, which does not exist in other provinces, where there are separate local representatives of the Post Office, but I hope that this objection may ere long be overcome. The Post Master General of the North-Western Provinces has pointed out the marked difference between the working of the district post in the North-Western Provinces (which is under his management) and that of the district post of Oudh in respect of the proportion of covers returned as undeliverable. In the North-Western Provinces the proportion is 7·86, while in Oudh it is no less than 25·04. I am aware that a reorganization of the district post in Oudh has been commenced, and will probably produce better results; but I think that experience goes to show that the transfer of the management of such local posts to the imperial Post Office is an improvement, mainly, perhaps, owing to the greater attention bestowed on them by a department which of all others is most interested in their efficiency. District officers have rarely sufficient time at their disposal for the effective supervision of the district post.

53. The general results of district post operations, so far as concerns correspondence sent to or received from the imperial post, are given in Appendix No. VII, from which the following abstract has been prepared, viz. :—

	Number.	Percentage.
Sent to district post for delivery ...	5,070,693	Being 8·09 per cent. of the total number of covers received for delivery.
Portion of the above received back undelivered	540,685	Being 10·66 per cent. on the number sent to district post.
Received from district post	3,129,661	Being 5 002 per cent. on the total number of covers received by General Post Office for delivery.

The percentage of covers returned as undeliverable is, it will be observed, 10·66, but this is the average result of returns, differing widely for the different provinces. In Bombay and the North-Western Provinces (excluding Oudh), where the district posts have for some time been under the management of the imperial post, the percentages are only 7 and 7·86 respectively.

SECTION V.—MISCELLANEOUS.

54. The usual statement showing the number of complaints made by the public during the year is given in Appendix No. VIII, but, as observed in my last report, the statement "affords no material for any reliable conclusion as to the working of the department, excepting in so far as it gives evidence of the fact of enquiry having been made on the subjects of the complaints received." Complaints respecting parcels or registered letters can generally be made the subject of a thorough and more or less satisfactory enquiry, but the case is different as respects the great bulk of complaints in regard to the loss or non-delivery of unregistered letters, and this naturally makes the public indifferent about preferring complaints in such cases. This is the main reason why the recorded number of complaints is of so little use as a criterion of the working of the department, and of the amount of dissatisfaction caused to the public.

55. The total number of complaints received has increased from 1,746 for 1866-67 to 2,186 for 1867-68, i. e., by 25 per cent.; or, allowing for the difference of period (the returns for 1866-67 being for only eleven months), by 14 per cent. This increase is not so large as in the previous year, in which (allowing for the difference of period) the increase was 16 per cent. The chief increase during the year now under report is to be found in the Bengal Circle (45 per cent.), and more than half of the complaints in that province are against the Calcutta Post Office. This is partly due to the failure of the first experiment of a local post in the town of Calcutta, which, as already noticed (para. 27), gave rise to great complaints. Still, even with this explanation, the return of complaints is by no means favorable either to Calcutta or to the Bengal Circle.

56. The number of cases in which punishment has been inflicted on Post Office employés for offences committed by them has increased from 87 in the previous year (equivalent to 98 for a year of 12 months) to 126 in the year now under report, while the proportion of legal convictions obtained has fallen from 71 per cent. to 64 per cent. A considerable proportion of the offences committed had reference to the abstraction of currency notes, respecting which special remarks have already been made (para. 24).

57. The number of highway robberies of mails during the year under report is much less than in the previous year, as will be seen from the figures on the margin. I noticed last year the large reduction in the number of robberies committed in foreign territory, viz., from 36 in 1865-66 to 26 in 1866-67. It is satisfactory to find, as respects robberies in foreign territory, a further reduction to 19 in 1867-68, and as respects robberies in British territory, a reduction from 17 to 11.

58. The reduction in the number of robberies in foreign territory is mainly due to the exertions of the political authorities in the Madras and Bombay Circles, and especially to those in Hyderabad and Kattyawar, where such robberies are ordinarily most frequent. Of the three robberies in foreign territory shown under Madras, one was committed within a few miles of Sholapore, and two in the Hyderabad territory. The two cases of robbery in foreign territory shown against Bombay were committed in Kattyawar in August 1867. No similar improvement is observable in the North-Western Provinces, where the number of robberies in foreign territory (14) exceeds by 2 the number given for each of the two preceding years. And of these 14 cases there is only one in which the robbers have been apprehended. The robberies in question took place in the territories marginally noted.

SECTION VI.—NON-POSTAL BRANCHES OF THE DEPARTMENT.

61. These branches consisted at the close of the year under review of the same lines and agencies as in the previous year, viz., a bullock train in Bengal connecting Darjeeling with the East Indian Railway, the military van dâk in the Punjab, and the passenger service by mail cart or parcel van on the various mail cart lines.

62. The financial results of the working of these branches will be found in Appendices XI and XII, of which an abstract is given on the margin. A deficit of Rs. 16,911 was shown in the last year's statement, but for the current year there is a surplus of Rs. 22,118. The accounts of the bullock train and the Punjab military van dâk are now kept under the head of funds. There has been some difficulty in ascertaining the exact balance at the credit of the Punjab military van dâk prior to the incorporation of its accounts with those of the Post Office. Some doubt still remains respecting a few items, but it may be stated generally that the accumulated surplus amounted at the close of the year under review to not less than Rs. 40,000. Orders have been received for a considerable extension of the Punjab military van dâk, so as to form a connecting link between the upper and lower sections of the Punjab Railway, as well as for the opening of a new branch line to Puthankote. These extensions will be noticed in the next report.

63. Under this head it may be well to refer briefly to the resumption by the Post Office subsequent to the year under report of bullock train operations in the Upper Provinces. The fact that all the preparations for this step were made in 1867-68 is sufficient ground for a reference to them here. In 1864 the Government made over the entire business of carrying goods to the Indian Carrying Company, providing for the conveyance of Government troops, stores, &c., at specified contract rates. The arrangement proved to be a failure, and towards the close of 1867 this department received orders to prepare for the early resumption of bullock train operations. These arrangements were completed by the 16th April, when the Government lines were opened. Since then I have received authority to extend the Government agency in the Upper Provinces, as well as in other provinces, provided that reasonable terms can be obtained from the various carrying agencies for the conveyance of goods, the contents of which are not declared. The great obstacle to the organization of a general agency through which goods may be booked from one part of India to another consists in the complicated and varying scales of classification adopted by the different carrying agencies whom it would be necessary to employ, such as railways and other agencies for transport by land, river or sea; and it is only if this obstacle can be surmounted by the concession on the part of all agencies, and especially of the Railway Companies, of a reasonably low rate for "undeclared goods" that the contemplated extension is likely to succeed.

64. The department is also at present providing for the organization of a large military transport train between Nagpore and Jubbulpore.

65. Steps are also being taken in view to the arrangement of a system of money orders between India and the United Kingdom through the agency of the Post Office Department.

66. It will be seen from the above remarks that since the close of the year under review, a large addition to the non-postal branches of the department has been made, with the prospect of still further extension in the same direction. More detailed notice of these additions to the work of the department will be taken in the next report: the mention of them here being necessarily brief, as they are connected with the year under review, only in so far as the preparations for some of them were made before its close.

SECTION VII—FINANCIAL RESULTS.

67. The financial results of the Post Office continue to be satisfactory. The revenue from private correspondence shows a considerably larger increase than during either of the two preceding years, as is shown by the statement on the margin. The following figures exhibit the progress made during each of the three last years, viz. :—

Excluding the Straits Settlement	36,11,245
1867-68	37,74,607	1,63,362

The above figures do not include the non-postal branches of the department, which have been separately noticed in the preceding Section.

68. The revenue from official postage has, as was expected, been violently affected by the introduction in 1866 of a change in the rules regulating the transmission of service covers and the mode of bringing the postage thereon to account. The official postage receipts for the last three years have been as follows, viz. :—

		Official Postage.
		Rs.
1865-66	. ...	50,08,004
1866-67	... including Straits Settlement	28,97,739
	... excluding ditto	28,89,758
1867-68	... ...	23,09,840

As the new rules were in operation during the whole of 1867-68, it may be assumed that the reduction has reached its limit. And it ought here to be explained that the present returns do not include the postage chargeable on official correspondence conveyed by the imperial post within the limits of the same district and not sent by or addressed to a privileged office. Such correspondence is, under the present rules, exempted from charge; and to this exemption is attributable the greater portion of the apparent reduction in the amount charged as official postage. The new rules have unquestionably operated to reduce the weight of the official correspondence transmitted by those offices which have to prepay their letters by means of service stamps, or against which separate postage accounts are kept; but the enormous reduction in the official postage charges must, as already stated, be attributed, in a very large degree, to the exemption from charge of official covers transmitted by the imperial post within the limits of the same district. To explain more clearly the nature of this exemption, I may take the instance of an Inspector in the education department, whose office is not one with which the Post Office keeps an account. A letter addressed by such an Inspector to any office with which the Post Office keeps an account (e. g., the office of the Director of Public Instruction) is charged in the postage account of the office which receives it, and if addressed to any office with which the Post Office does not keep an account, it has to be prepaid by means of service stamps, unless the office of address is within the limits of the same district, in which case it is not charged at all. This exemption, as already explained in paragraph 28, is only temporary; but while it lasts it obviously prevents any precise estimate of the actual reduction in the chargeable weight of official correspondence resulting from the new system. I am inclined to think that when the exemption above referred to is removed, the official postage revenue will rise again to about 35 or 40 lakhs.

69. The expenditure of the Post Office has increased considerably during the last three years, as will be seen from the following figures, viz.:—

		Disbursements Rs.
1865-66		41,88,625
1866-67	including Straits Settlements	43,95,798
	excluding ditto	43,75,068
1867-68		47,54,940

The increase of expenditure during 1867-68 is partly due to increased expenditure on account of special trains for overland mails. This item amounts to Rs. 18,000, being the difference between the expenditure under this head in 1866-67 and 1867-68, or more correctly between the amounts actually paid in the two years, for the payment in 1867-68 was principally for trains employed in the preceding year. There was also a large item of Rs. 22,283 on account of compensation to the horse owners on two important mail cart lines, viz., from Khundwa to Agra, and Nagpore to Jubbulpore, where large numbers of the mail horses were carried off by a fatal epidemic disease. This circumstance was noticed in paragraph 12 of last year's report, but the payment of the greater portion of the compensation fell in the year now under report.

The remainder of the increase is due partly to the postal service in Abyssinia (about Rs. 6,500), partly to the enhanced rates of pay found necessary in various parts of the country to runners and other establishments, owing to increased cost of living or increased demand for labor, partly also to the introduction in the latter part of the year of the revisions referred to in paragraphs 10 to 20, and partly to the extension of lines and offices.

70. A yet larger increase will have to be reported next year, owing partly to heavy arrear payments for special trains used since April 1867 (payment having been stopped by Government pending a settlement of the proper rate of charge), partly to the recent decision of Government to pay the Railway Companies for the haulage of sorting carriages, partly to the increased cost of conveying the whole overland mails from Bombay, and partly to the introduction of the improved scales of pay for office establishments and peons already referred to (paras. 21 and 22).

71. I ought to note here that there are items of free service rendered to the Post Office which have never been noticed in connection with the Post Office accounts. Under this head comes the carriage of the mails performed under contract free of charge by the various Railway Companies in India. Payment is only made for special trains for the conveyance of non-service banghy parcels, and (under recent orders) for the haulage of sorting carriages: and the free service rendered in the way of carriage of ordinary mails may be roughly estimated at about 2 lakhs. In the same category may also be mentioned the steam contract services of the British India Steam Navigation Company, already referred to (paras. 5 to 8), the subsidies of which are not charged in the Post Office accounts. I am far from saying that the whole of these subsidies form a proper charge against the Post Office, for, in point of fact, the contracts are entered into on grounds, to a great extent, independent of postal considerations, and contain conditions about the conveyance of troops, Government stores, &c., with which the Post Office has nothing to do. Eventually, perhaps, when the postal traffic on the lines in question becomes considerable, the whole subsidy payments may form a reasonable charge against the Post Office, and anyhow, it is proper to bear the matter in mind, by acknowledging on the part of the Post Office that it gets the benefit of such services without paying for them.

72. There is also an item on account of discount on the sale of postage stamps, which has never been shown in the accounts submitted with the annual report, but which ought to be shown either as a charge, or, more properly, as a deduction, from revenue. The amount of discount for the year under report appears from the statements rendered by the several Superintendents of Stamps to be Rs. 1,24,805.

73. There is a further item on account of stores for the Post Office purchased or manufactured in England, which for the year under report was estimated to amount to Rs. 31,680.

74. There is also an item on account of printing in Bengal and Madras for which, as noticed in the report of 1864-65, no charge is made or any estimate obtainable. The cost may perhaps be roughly taken at Rs. 40,000.

75. But even taking all the items* above mentioned into account, and allowing for the prospective increase of expenditure referred to in preceding paragraphs, it may be safely stated that the Post Office will continue to show a considerable surplus of receipts. At present, notwithstanding the large reduction in the amount of official postage brought to account, there is a surplus of Rs. 13,29,506, which is reduced by the deductions above mentioned to Rs. 2,20,689. As already noticed, however, (para. 68) the official postage revenue is considerably understated at present, owing to the temporary exclusion from account of the official correspondence passing within the limits of the same district, and not addressed to or sent by a privileged office. The inclusion of this item under the head of revenue would raise the above-mentioned surplus to about 14 lakhs.

No. 3021, dated 31st October, 1868.

RESOLUTION—By the Government of India, FINANCIAL DEPT.

Read—

Report on the operations of the Post Office of India for the year 1867-68.

RESOLUTION.—This report is replete with information condensed into a readable compass, and it may be briefly reviewed thus,—

Paragraph 3.

2. At the close of this paragraph, it is said that if the subsidy payments on account of the mail contract with the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company can be better distributed among the several countries concerned, the recent enhancement in the postage rates between India and the United Kingdom can be spared. The Director General's representations on this point have already formed the subject of correspondence with the Secretary of State for India.

Paragraph 4.

3. The experiment of "sea-sorting," that is, sorting the letters on board the steamers, is interesting, and it is hoped that there may be success to report next year.

Paragraphs 9 to 23.

4. These paragraphs relate to increase of remuneration to establishments. This was no doubt necessary and well deserved, and will doubtless conduce to efficiency. The numbers too are increasing. At the present moment there are 21,000 employés in the Indian Post Office, all grades included.

5. The increase in the numbers of the Sub-Inspectors, and the improvement in the status of the delivery peons are points of special interest. It should be borne in mind by all postal employés that if there be real increase in efficiency, the result will appear in increase of correspondence. And the determination of Government in bettering the position of the Department and those serving in it, must be largely influenced by consideration of such result. Doubtless, if the postal clerks could be thoroughly instructed in their work, there could be much economy of skilled labor, and the same strength of establishments might do more work than it does now.

Paragraph 24.

6. In this paragraph, allusion is properly made to the losses of Currency Notes in transmission by post. The number of notes thus lost is great absolutely : far too great indeed. Still relatively to the vast number transmitted in all, it is not great, amounting to a very slight percentage. But as the tendency on the part of the public is to use the post more and more in this way, the matter must continue to receive attention. If the use of thicker envelopes can be enforced (the possibility of which, however, seems doubtful), that may do some good. But the most effectual plan is that adopted in England, of compulsory registration of all covers containing coin or notes. This point should be considered, and a report submitted thereon.

Paragraph 25.

7. The success of the local posts within the town of Bombay is very satisfactory. The failure of the same plan within the town of Calcutta is partly, though perhaps not fully, accounted for. One reason no doubt is this, that in Bombay every one is anxious to save peon labor which is so expensive. In Calcutta, where as yet peon labor is not so dear, there is less necessity and less anxiety on the point.

Paragraph 32.

8. The increase of Post Offices, chiefly rural, is good : 467 new offices having been opened within the year. That 178 of these should belong to the Bombay Presidency is creditable to Western India. And it is understood from the Director General that in this respect, as in various others, great credit is due to Mr. Hogg, the Officiating Post Master General of Bombay. It also appears that 134 new letter-boxes were established within the year, of which 80 belong to Bombay. The success of the letter-boxes on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and the still greater success on the Baroda line, are noteworthy. All this is indicative of the advance both of trade and of education in Western India. Further, the success of the letter-boxes attached to the mail guards' compartment in the railways of the Madras Presidency, is very observable.

9. A report as to what is doing in these respects in the railways of the Bengal Presidency, and with what result, should be furnished.

Paragraph 34.

10. The employment of rural messengers alluded to in this paragraph, is very important, and the result in the various parts of India should be watched. If, as supposed by the Director General, it will be the means of encouraging postal correspondence among the masses of the people, it will be of the highest importance.

Paragraph 35.

11. The increase in postal mileage from 47,929 miles to 49,671 of all kinds is tolerably good, especially when it is seen further on that the aggregate of private correspondence has increased.

Paragraph 36.

12. The increase in correspondence from 65 to 69 millions of covers of all sorts is also fair. Before 1854, that is, before the Indian postal reform, the aggregate was under 20 millions. Thus the development of postal correspondence in British India within the last 15 years has really been immense. And yet it is certain that, if only the district posts can be better organized in all the rural localities throughout India, the correspondence of the country is susceptible of indefinite further development. The marked increase, nearly 20 per cent., in book packets is very gratifying.

Paragraph 45.

13. Under the head of postage stamps, the increase in the half anna and one anna categories seems satisfactory.

Paragraphs 47 to 53.

14. These paragraphs relate to district posts. The complete organization of the rural post throughout India is, indeed, one of the main postal questions of the time. The experience of Bombay and the North-Western Provinces seems clearly to indicate the benefit of the amalgamation of the district with the imperial post in respect to management and control. The plan should be extended perfectly in all the provinces of India, and the returns for the district post should be kept on an uniform plan with the imperial post; but the figures should be separate, so that the exact progress of the former may be noted. The placing of the district posts under the imperial postal authorities will not weaken the just control of the local authorities, but will only substitute professional for unprofessional management.

Paragraph 53.

15. In this paragraph, the proportion of undelivered letters in the district post returns, nearly 11 per cent., is one proof out of many of the need of reform in this branch. Even in Bombay and the North-Western Provinces, the proportions, 7 and 8 per cent., are too high. The difficulty in delivery of Native letters is, indeed, inherent in the circumstances of the country, and forms one of the chief obstacles to the extension of correspondence by post. It is doubtless felt equally by the imperial post. But that is only a reason why it must be grappled with more and more by the department.

16. The reduction in the number of mail robberies in the Bombay and Madras circles attributed (paragraph 58) to the exertions of the political authorities in those quarters is creditable.

Paragraphs 61 to 65.

17. The extension of the transits and the agencies managed by the department is interesting. There will probably be much further extension during the year owing to measures lately sanctioned. So long as such operations do not interfere with private enterprise, they are a legitimate means of adding to the income of the department, and supply a want really felt by the public in this country.

18. Paragraph 67 and succeeding paragraphs relate to the finance of the department. The revenue from official postage is more a matter of account than of real finance. The practical point is this, that the receipts from private postage rose from 36 to 37¾ lakhs, or 4½ per cent. This is so far well. But the charges on the whole correspondence, including official and private postage, rose from [illegible]¾ to 47½ lakhs, or 8½ per cent. Hence it is manifest that the increased receipts [illegible] in a lesser ratio, as compared with the increased expenditure, and this has [illegible]n the case for several years past. This cannot be avoided perhaps, but it must never be left out of sight. The expensiveness of carrying letters in India increases faster than the growth of private correspondence. Apparently the increase cannot at all be accounted for by increase of official postage, for that seems rather to have been diminished. On the whole, the difference (or deficit as it is called) between the cash receipts and cash expenditure of the Post Office in India is rather on the increase, and so far the financial result is becoming less and less favorable. On the other hand, the increased cost has arisen partly from the general rise in prices, and partly from the need of administrative reform, and it is feared too that there will be still further increase.

19. The items of debit, noted in paragraphs 71 to 73, should in future years be brought to account; although, as pointed out in the report, the contracts entered into by Government with the British India Steam Navigation Company for the various local steam services, are to a large extent based on grounds independent of postal considerations; it seems advisable to treat the subsidies as charges of the Post Office, that department being, on the whole, the one most interested in the maintenance of such communications, and best able to look after the punctual performance of the services contracted for.

20. The "surplus" mentioned in paragraph 75, is of course more apparent than real, as the official postage is only a nominal receipt. But the English Post Office makes no distinction between official and private correspondence, the revenue from both being treated as a bonâ fide revenue. At all events, the establishments employed for the conveyance of official and private correspondence in India, are paid for to the extent of nearly 80 per cent. by the revenue derived from private correspondence alone, and even if the Post Office be charged with the items noted in the margin of paragraph 75 of the report, this percentage is only reduced to 64 $\frac{6}{10}$ of the whole expenses, exclusive of the profit made in the non-postal branches. This cannot but be regarded as a satisfactory state of things.

21. The Governor General in Council is of opinion that Mr. Monteath is exerting himself in a very practical manner for the improvement of the important Department over which he presides, and that he is entitled to the thanks of Government for his services to it.

ORDERED, that the foregoing Resolution be communicated to the Director General of the Post Office of India, and the Comptroller General of Accounts.

Also, that the Report and the Resolution be sent to the Home Department for publication in the Supplement to the Gazette of India.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

EXTENSION TO HINDUS AND BUDDHISTS OF THE TESTAMENTARY CLAUSES OF THE INDIAN SUCCESSION ACT.

Nos. 1247—1255, dated Simla, 22nd August 1865.

From—E. C. BAYLEY, Esq., Secy. to Govt. of India, HOME DEPT.,

To—All Local Governments and Administrations.

Although the Native text-books of Hindú Law nowhere recognise a posthumous disposition of property, the validity of a Hindú's Will has long been admitted by our Courts in the Presidencies of Bengal and Bombay. In Madras also, after some fluctuations of opinion, it is now settled that a Hindú's testamentary power is co-extensive with his independent right of alienation inter vivos. Liberty of testation is thus thoroughly established throughout Peninsular India; and it is understood that the practice of making Wills is beginning to prevail among the Burmese Buddhists, although their Law of Succession is founded on that of the Hindús. The Muhammadan Law recognises the testamentary power, which, however, without the consent of the heirs, does not extend to more than one-third of the testator's estate.

2. In the case of the Hindús and Burmese the power in question has probably been derived from the English Law, and its exercise doubtless produces in India the beneficial effects which it has produced in England and elsewhere, by stimulating the circulation of property and quickening the stagnation of society. But the power has been engrafted on the Hindú system, and is used by the Muhammadans, without any of those securities for its due exercise, such as the requirement of writing, signature and attestation, which have been found desirable in Europe. Nor are Native testators subject to any restraints such as exist in England in the cases of devises to religious or charitable uses, of postponements of the acquisition of the absolute interest in property, and of prohibitions of accumulations of its income.

3. Thus the High Court at Bombay has decided that a Hindú's Will need not be attested, and the High Court of Madras has lately declared, in a learned and elaborate judgment, that a Hindú's Will need not be in writing, in other words, that a Hindú may make a valid nuncupative Will, and this without any formalities similar to those required in such cases by European systems of jurisprudence. So Hindús' nuncupative Wills were held valid by the late Supreme Court at Fort William, and are recognised by the present High Court of Judicature for Bengal. Considering the facilities with which frauds in setting up nuncupative Wills are attended (for false swearing is more easy to perpetrate and more difficult to detect than forgery), it may, perhaps, be doubted whether the benefits abovementioned, arising from the introduction among the Natives of the testamentary power, are not counterbalanced by the encouragement which its recognition by our Courts at present affords to perjury. Moreover, the same evidence that sets up a false nuncupative Will may practically revoke a true written one. The witness has only to declare that the testator made a nuncupative Will subsequent to the date of the written Will, and revoking the latter; and his evidence, if believed, destroys the written Will, however solemnly executed or carefully preserved. Lastly, even in the case of a genuine testamentary disposition by word of mouth, the certainty of writing is replaced by the frailty of memory.

4. Then, as to the non-existence of restraints on the testamentary power: a Native may now, on his death-bed, when his mind is enfeebled by disease or fear, deprive his nearest relations of self-acquired property which would otherwise have devolved upon them, and bequeath it in accordance with the dictates of his priests, or the promptings of his own superstition. A Native testator, in the absence of anything like what is technically called the rule against perpetuities, may lock up his estate for an indefinite time, and thus obstruct the circulation of property, check the improvement of land, and withdraw capital from its natural employment in commerce. A Native testator may legally create an accumulating trust, absorbing the entire income of property, not merely (as in the well-known Thellusson case) during the full period for which the vesting of property may, according to English Law, be protracted, but (for anything to the contrary enacted by the Legislature or laid down by the Judges) for the full time expressed by the Native formula of limitation, 'so long as moon and sun endure.' Thus in the case of a bequest to the testator's family idol, with directions that, after its expenses are paid, the surplus shall belong to certain persons and their descendants in the male line as a joint family, and that none of these heirs shall have power to alienate, the Privy Council has held that such a testamentary disposition is effectual, although the family may obviously remain undivided for ever. There is reason to fear, too, that, under colour of a bequest to religious uses, a Hindú often not only enjoys property but trades with it, without his beneficial interest being subject to the just demands of his creditors. It may be that the creditors would have a right to come against the surplus income of the property after providing thereout for the expenses of the idol. But the ascertainment of what ought to be allowed for such expenses is generally a matter of such difficulty as practically to reduce that right to a nullity.

5. Again, a Native's Will, not requiring to be proved, need not be deposited for safe custody. The resulting opportunities for forgery and fraudulent alteration are obvious. Nor can a Native executor be compelled to exhibit an inventory or account of his testator's estate, except by the tedious, expensive, and hazardous process of a lawsuit. The consequence is, where the estate is too small to bear the costs of the suit, that women, children and absentees have no adequate check on the executor, and at any distance of time, it is difficult to fix him with the possession of moveable and sometimes even of immoveable property.

6. Lastly, the character and ex-officio powers of a Native [illegible] be by no means clearly defin[illegible] appeal that he has no greater [illegible]

mortgage, the lender is bound to enquire into the necessity for the loan, and to satisfy himself, as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the Manager is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. If this be so in the case of a mortgage or conditional sale, à fortiori, it must be so in the case of an absolute sale. It is unnecessary to dwell on the difficulties which this doctrine imposes on all persons dealing with Hindú executors.

7. The Indian Succession Act, 1865, contains provisions on all these subjects, expressed in language of remarkable clearness and simplicity.

8. As to the execution of Wills, it provides (section 50) that the testator (who must have completed the age of 18, and be of sound mind) shall sign the Will, or that it shall be signed by some other person in his presence and by his direction, and that the Will shall be attested by at least two witnesses, each of whom must sign it in the presence of the testator. To preclude the danger of allowing the Will to be supported by the testimony of persons beneficially interested in its contents, the Act declares (section 54) that a bequest to an attesting witness, or his or her wife or husband, shall be void.

9. As to revoking Wills, the Act (section 57) provides that no Will shall be revoked otherwise than—(a) by the marriage of the testator; (b) by another Will or Codicil; (c) by a writing declaring an intention to revoke, and executed as a Will is required to be executed; or (d) by burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the Will with the intention of revoking it.

10. Section 101 restricts the power of creating successive interests in property by declaring that "no bequest is valid whereby the vesting of the "thing bequeathed may be delayed beyond the life-time of one or more "persons living at the testator's decease, and the minority of some person who "shall be in existence at the expiration of that period, and to whom, if he "attains full age, the thing bequeathed is to belong."

11. A direction to accumulate the income to arise from any property is declared (section 104) to be void, except in the case of immoveable property, or where the accumulation is to be made from the death of the testator. In either of these cases the direction is valid in respect only of the income within the year next after the death.

12. As to bequests to religious or charitable uses, the Act provides (section 105) that no one having a nephew or niece, or other nearer relative, shall have power to make such bequest, except by Will executed not less than twelve months before his death, and deposited within six months from its execution in the place provided by law for the custody of the Wills of living persons.

13. The Act impliedly requires every Will to be proved by declaring (section 187) that no right, as executor or legatee, can be established unless probate of the Will shall have been granted. And section 259 provides that all original Wills of which probate may be granted are to be preserved among the records of the Court until some public registry for Wills is established.

14. Within six months of the grant of probate the executor must exhibit in Court an inventory containing a full and true estimate of the deceased's property, and must, in like manner, within one year from the grant, exhibit an account of the estate, showing the assets that may have come to his hands, and the manner in which they have been applied or disposed of (section 277).

15. Lastly, the character and powers of an executor are clearly defined. He is the legal representative of the deceased for all purposes, and all the deceased's separate property vests in him as such (section 179). He has the same power to sue in respect of all causes of action that survive the deceased and to distrain for all rents due to him at the time of his death, as the deceased had when living (section 267). And he may dispose of the deceased's property either wholly or in part, and whether moveable or immoveable, in such manner as he shall think fit (section 269).

and to request that, after consultation with such persons as † may deem best capable of advising on such a matter, ‡ will favour the Government of India with § opinion as to the expediency of extending to the Hindús, Muhammadans and Buddhists, or any and which of them, such parts of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, as relate to Testamentary Succession, including in this phrase all that relates to the execution, revocation, interpretation and probate of Wills, and the limitation of the exercise of the testamentary power. You will understand that it is not proposed to increase in any respect the testamentary power possessed by Natives, nor to give it to any Natives (if such there be) who do not at present possess it; but only to provide rules calculated to insure its being exercised beneficially to the community, and satisfactorily to the surviving relatives of individual testators.

From—The Secretary of State for India,

To—The Government of India.

The Government of Bombay have forwarded to me a copy of the letter of your Excellency's Government, dated 22nd August (No. 1248) of 1865, on the question of whether it is expedient to extend the provisions of the Indian Succession Act to Hindús and Muhammadans.

2. I have read with great interest, and have considered in Council, your Excellency's letter to the Government of Bombay, and the opinions which it has elicited from many European and Native gentlemen in Western India.

3. My object in addressing your Excellency in Council on the present occasion is to impress upon your Excellency's Government the propriety of exercising very great caution in dealing with a subject which affects the interests of the mass of the population of India.

4. From the operation of the Indian Succession Act, the very large majority of the inhabitants of India, the Hindús, the Muhammadans, and the Buddhists, were excepted. The Act became law in March 1865. It must be assumed that the Legislature had good grounds for excepting so large a proportion of the subjects of the Indian Empire from the provisions of an Act drawn with consummate ability, and it is, therefore, with a feeling of apprehension that I perceive, after a lapse of little more than twelve months from its enactment, of little more than six months from the commencement of its actual operation, a project in contemplation for the removal of this most important restriction.

5. As at present advised, I am of opinion that the time is still far distant when such an enactment would be expedient.

6. On such a subject, it appears to me that the Legislature should not be solely guided by the opinions of Native gentlemen resident in the Presidency towns, who, by education and by intercourse with European [illegible] have, in some degrees, been anglicized. Such opinions are not always a faithful exponent of Native feelings and Native prejudices, or even of Native intelligence.

7. I am unable to perceive that any great practical evil has yet occurred. The practice of testation may be growing up under our rule among Hindús, and the time may arrive when it will be found necessary to impose restrictions on the testamentary disposal of property, but up to the present time it is stated that probably not more than one Hindú out of ten thousand makes a will. And, with reference to formalities in execution, it was stated by the late Chief Justice of Bombay, that out of 420 wills by Natives filed in Court between 1820 and 1863, there were only ten which were not attested, and only eleven which were not attested by two witnesses.

8. Regarding then, as I do, with great doubt, the propriety of mooting this important question at the present time, I desire that the Bill, which shall eventually be prepared, may not be introduced into the Council of the Viceroy, nor published in the Gazette of India, until it has been considered by me in Council, and I further desire that I may be furnished with the opinions of all the gentlemen, European and Native, whom your Excellency in Council may consult as to the proposed measure.

No. 5, dated 28th March 1868.

From—The Government of India,
To—The Secretary of State for India.

In reference to Lord Cranborne's despatch, Judicial, No. 5, dated the 7th February 1867, we have the honour to offer the following remarks:—

2. When the Indian Succession Act, 1865, was under the consideration of the Legislature, it was proposed to extend to Natives the testamentary portion of that measure; but it was felt that, in three respects, sufficient information was not before the Council to justify an immediate extension in this direction. Doubts were entertained as to how far it would be politic to interfere with the power to make oral wills which Muhammadans have always possessed, and evidence was wanting as to the propriety of restricting Natives in creating perpetuities and in making bequests to religious and charitable uses. A clause was accordingly introduced, as a temporary provision, excluding the Hindús, Muhammadans and Buddhists from the operation of any part of the Act.

3. Some months after the passing of the Act, a circular* was issued from the Home Department to the several Local Governments respecting the extension to Natives of its testamentary clauses. Attention was called to the fact that, although liberty of testation was established throughout British India, and although the testamentary power of Hindús was derived from the English law, there were no securities for the due exercise of that power by Natives, such as the requirement of writing, signature and attestation, which were found indispensable in Europe.

* Dated 22nd August 1865.

4. It was also pointed out that, although, in England, nuncupative wills have long been placed under considerable restrictions as to the persons by whom they can be made, as to the witnesses required to be present, and as to the time within which testimony is admissible to prove the speaking, in India, our Courts were compelled to recognize such wills when made by Hindús of any age or calling and under any circumstances whatever. It was observed that the favourite fraud of bringing forward false wills was encouraged by the non-requirement of writing; that the evidence setting up a false nuncupative will might revoke a true written one, and that, even in the case of a genuine testamentary disposition, the certainty of writing was replaced by the frailty of memory. Further remarks, which will now be merely referred to, were made as to the absence, in the case of Native testators, of any restraints on the creation of perpetuities and on devises to religious or charitable uses, as to the non-requirement of probate of their wills, whether written or oral, and as to the difficulty of ascertaining the character and powers of a Native executor.

5. The circular concluded by pointing out the provisions of the Indian Succession Act on the subjects thus treated of, and by requesting an opinion as to the propriety of extending those provisions to Natives.

6. To this circular replies were received from all the local authorities, accompanied, in almost every instance, by papers written by such European and Native gentlemen as were deemed best capable of advising on the matter. The general result of the opinions contained in this large and valuable mass of papers may, so far as they relate to the Presidencies of Bengal, Madras and Bombay, to Oudh, and to the Central Provinces, be compendiously expressed as follows:—

1st.—The practice of making nuncupative wills should be abolished, and the provisions of the Indian Succession Act as to execution of wills and codicils should be adopted in the case not only of Hindús but Muhammadans.

2nd.—Marriage should not, in the case of a Native testator, revoke his will. In other respects the provisions of the Succession Act as to revocation should be followed.

3rd.—It is inexpedient to impose, in the case of Natives, any restrictions on the exercise of the testamentary power in favour of religious or charitable uses, or for the creation of perpetuities.

4th.—The provisions of the Succession Act as to the interpretation of wills should, with some few exceptions be adopted.

5th.—Probate should be made compulsory, and the provisions of the Succession Act as to administration with will annexed and as to the powers and duties of an executor, should be extended with some slight modifications.

On the other hand, the Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces and the Chief Commissioner of British Burma thought that the proposed legislation would be inexpedient; and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Panjáb, while of opinion that nuncupative wills should be invalid, and that all wills should be written, attested and proved, did not recommend the extension in their entirety of the provisions of the Succession Act on these subjects.

7. These papers were sent home, and elicited a despatch* from your predecessor, Lord Cranborne, in which he impresses upon the Government of India the propriety of exercising very great caution in dealing with a subject affecting the interests of the mass of the population of India, and, after referring to the fact that the Natives were expressly exempted from the operation of the Act, states that it is with a feeling of apprehension he perceives a project in contemplation for the removal of this exemption.

* Judicial, No. 5, dated 7th February 1867.

8. These remarks may have been, to a certain extent, founded on misconception. We never intended to apply to Natives the rules as to intestate succession contained in the Act. The Government of India merely proposed to legislate for the wills of Natives, which, in the case at least of Hindús and Buddhists are now absolutely devoid of regulation. And as wills are but rarely made by Hindús outside the Presidency towns, the subject, though doubtless to be cautiously dealt with, can hardly be said to affect the interests of the mass of the population.

9. Lord Cranborne goes on to say that, on such a subject, the legislature should not be solely guided by the opinions of Native gentlemen resident in the Presidency towns, who have, in some degree, been anglicized. In this remark we concur; but would observe that the proposed legislation is supported not merely by anglicized Natives, but also by the Governors of Madras and Bombay in Council, by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, by the Chief Commissioners of Oudh and the Central Provinces, and by those officials whose position eminently fits them for forming an opinion on the subject, namely, the Civilian and Barrister Judges of the High Courts of Madras and Bombay. We would further remind you that the proposed legislation is not a n[illegible] 1852,—sixteen years ago—Sir Charles (then the Hon'ble C. R. M.[illegible] pared a Bill containing (inter alia) a clause requiring Natives' w[illegible] ing signed and attested, which was approved by Sir R. B[illegible] Dunbar, Colvin and Raikes, then Judges of the Sadr [illegible]wání [illegible] 1859, Sir A. Buller framed a[illegible] taining clauses as to the execution in writing and the revocation of Natives' wills In 1863, a Native Member of the Madras Council, the late V. Sadagopácharlu introduced a Bill, the fourth section of which provided that no will of a Hindú should be valid unless executed in the manner prescribed by Act XXV of 1838 (the Indian Wills' Act). The measures of Sir C. Jackson and Sir A. Buller were circulated to the local authorities and, so far as they related to wills, were received with general approbation. One or other would doubtless have become law had they not each unfortunately formed part of a Bill attempting to solve the insoluble problem of putting a stop to bénámi transactions. The Madras Bill was postponed in consequence of its framer's death, and, though subsequently taken up by his Native successor in the Madras Council, now stands over, in consequence, we believe, of the prevailing impression that the Government of India are about to deal with the matter. A Bill introduced in 1867 by our hon'ble Colleague Mr. Strachey, the late Chief Commissioner of Oudh, is now before the legislature, and provides for extending to the Taluqdárs of that Province most of the clauses of the Succession Act relating to the execution, revocation and interpretation of wills.

10. Lord Cranborne proceeds to observe that he is unable to see that any great practical evil has yet occurred owing to the absence, in the case of Natives, of rules regulating the exercise of the testamentary power. In reply to this, we venture to state that in Bengal and in the towns of Madras and Bombay, it has been, for at least twenty years, notorious that the power of making nuncupative wills encourages fraud and perjury. On this point we quote the following :—

"The great object of this section [section 4 of the Bill first above referred to] is to render nuncupative wills invalid, inasmuch as such wills are rarely, if ever, made, though constantly set up, and are a frequent source of fraud and perjury."—Statement of Objects and Reasons by SIR C. JACKSON, dated 29th January 1852.

"The permission of nuncupative wills is, no doubt, a [illegible] of gross fraud and trickery in Bengal. We have had lately an instance of the kind before [illegible] in which it was maintained that the proprietor of the Pattaspúr Estate in Midnapúr h[illegible] hours before his death, orally designated his widow as his sole heir and successor, to [illegible] of Hindú[illegible]on of two adopted sons. Some forms appear to be clearly necessary in order to give [illegible] the testamentary disposition of property, and none could be less cumbrous or open to a[illegible] than those stated in this section."—Minute by MR. J. R. COLVIN, Judge of the Sadr Díwání Adálat, dated 18th July 1853.

"The Council is aware that except in the Presidency towns, and even there as regard Hindús and Muhammadans, real property may be alienated, and all sorts of property be willed away, by word of mouth. The result of this system naturally is that persons are daily sworn to have given or willed away property when they never did so." Statement of Objects and Reasons by SIR A. BULLER, dated 8th January 1859.

"As nuncupative wills encourage fraud and false swearing, I see no objection to the extension of this section [Act X of 1865, section 59] as well as section 54 to the Hindús of Bengal."—Letter from BÁBÚ PRASANNA KUMÁR THÁKUR, to Secretary to Government of Bengal, dated 5th February 1866.

"There is no question that the recognition of the testamentary power, without wholesome rules and checks in the exercise of it, has, especially in the case of nuncupative wills, as it can very easily be imagined, encouraged extensive and wholesale frauds, which are left to be dealt with entirely at the discretion of the Courts, a discretion which it is impossible for any Court rightly to exercise."—Letter from BÁBÚ DIGAMBAR MITTRA, to Secretary to Government of Bengal, dated 26th February 1866.

"Having now pointed out the parts of the Indian Succession Act which seem to me to be properly applicable to the Hindús and Muhammadans, and having mentioned briefly the reasons why I think other parts of the Act should not be extended to those classes of Her Majesty's Indian subjects, I have only to add that, in my opinion, it would be better to extend to them the operation of the whole of this Act so far as regards testamentary succession, than to leave the law in its present state."—Letter from SIR A. BITTLESTON, Judge of the High Court of Madras, to the Governor of Fort St. George in Council, dated 13th November 1865.

"The proposed extension to Hindús and Muhammadans of such parts of the Indian Succession Act as relate to testamentary succession, is a measure, not only very beneficial to the community, but absolutely necessary. Power of testation, when properly exercised, is no doubt capable of producing much good, but the extension of that power to a proverbially litigious people, without any safeguard against its abuse or against fraud, will certainly prove a prolific source of mischief."—Letter from C. P. STRÍNIVÁSA, Principal Sadr Amín of Tinnevelly, to Chief Secretary to Government, Fort St. George, dated 5th January 1866.

"It has always appeared to me that the law as to the testamentary power of Hindús was a satisfactory state, and that it was to be regretted that, when the power came to be

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA, ASSEMBLED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF PARLIAMENT, 24 & 25 VIC., CAP. 67.

The Council met at Government House on Friday, the 27th November 1868.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, presiding.
His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal.
The Hon'ble G. Noble Taylor.
The Hon'ble H. Sumner Maine.
The Hon'ble Colonel H. W. Norman, C. B.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.
The Hon'ble Sir George Couper, Bart., C. B.
The Hon'ble Mahárájá Sir Dirg-Bijay Singh, Bahádur, K.C.S.I., of Balrámpúr.
The Hon'ble G. S. Forbes.
The Hon'ble D. Cowie.

The Hon'ble Mahárájá SIR DIRG-BIJAY SINGH made a solemn declaration of allegiance to Her Majesty, and that he would faithfully fulfil the duties of his office.

The Hon'ble MR. FORBES and the Hon'ble MR. COWIE took the oath of allegiance, and the oath that they would faithfully discharge the duties of their office.

NATIVE MARRIAGE BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE moved that the Bill to legalize marriages between certain Natives of India not professing the Christian religion, be referred to a Select Committee with instructions to report in two months. He said—"Sir, this Bill, after leave to introduce it had been given, was published by your Excellency's permission under a suspension of the Rules, so that public opinion might pronounce upon it. It has elicited a good deal of criticism, and if the Council will allow me, I will proceed to notice briefly some of the observations which have been made upon it. But before I do so, I venture to point out how slight an extension of the existing law is involved in the measure, and that it is only the last of a series of steps which have all been taken in the same direction. I imagine it to be known to the Council that, owing to the language of certain Statutes and Charters regulating the jurisdiction of the Indian Courts, the law of their religion became the law applicable to litigants. There being no fundamental law in India, the doctrine thence prevailed (though I should perhaps surprise the Council if I were to state how much doubt attends the point) that the greatest part of the civil rights of the Natives of India is determined by the religion which they profess. It would appear that, about forty years ago, some alarm was excited by the contention that any act which excluded a man from his religious communion entailed the forfeiture of his civil rights. For remedy of this, section 9 of Regulation VII of 1832 was passed, which provided as follows:—

"Whenever in any civil suit the parties to such suit may be of different persuasions, when one party shall be of the Hindoo and the other of the Mahommedan persuasion: or where one or more of the parties to the suit shall not be either of the Mahommedan or Hindoo persuasions: the laws of these religions shall not be permitted to operate to deprive such party or parties of any property to which, but for the operation of such laws, they would have been entitled."

The language of this provision, it will be seen, is somewhat cumbrous and perplexed, and, moreover, it merely applies to Bengal. Accordingly, the legislature of the day passed Act XXI of 1850, of which section 1 is to this effect—

"So much of any law or usage now in force within the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company, as inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property, or may be held in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance, by reason of his or her renouncing, or having been excluded from the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste, shall cease to be enforced as law in the Courts of the East India Company, and in the Courts established by Royal Charter within the said territories."

That is the lex loci Act of Lord Dalhousie's Government, which is still the charter of religious liberty in India. I myself do not entertain a particle of doubt, and I venture to think that no member of the Council who has read the discussion which preceded the enactment will doubt, that it was the intention of the framers of that Act to make it complete and to relieve from all civil disabilities all dissidents from Native religions. It was meant to condone all offences against religious rule, whether they were acts of omission or of commission. But probably from mistake, probably from attending too exclusively to the immediate question before them which affected only the first generation of dissidents, they left standing the greatest of all disabilities, the disability to contract a lawful marriage. It is incredible to me that, except by an oversight, they should have expressly provided for the protection of the right of inheritance, but should have omitted to provide for the right of contracting marriage, without which inheritance cannot arise. There has been received a petition from the British Indian Association of Bengal, in which the Association objects not only to the present measure, but to Act XXI of 1850, which they say was passed against the wishes of the Native community. The Council will no doubt attach to the arguments of that petition such weight as it may think fit, but at present I claim the statement as to the lex loci Act as an admission that the principle of one includes the principle of the other, and that he who objects to the present Bill must also object to Lord Dalhousie's measure. There is, however, no doubt a defect of the law which has been brought to notice by a portion of the sect of Hindús known as the Brahmos, who celebrate their marriages according to a ritual which they consider purified. An opinion of the Advocate General given on a case stated by them is to the effect that these marriages are invalid, and the offspring of them accordingly illegitimate. I do not dissent from Mr. Cowie's opinion, and, indeed, I do not see how he could have given any other from a purely legal point of view. But it is impossible to have stated a principle of more formidable application. For example, the civil rights of the Sikhs in the Panjáb depend on the rules of their religion, because the Sikhs are considered to come under the description of Hindús within the meaning of the earlier statutes. But are the marriages of Sikhs celebrated with orthodox regularity?—and, if they are, where does orthodoxy begin and where does it end? I have mentioned the Sikhs, not for the purpose of stating this question, but on account of a fact which has become known to me since the Bill was published, and is doubtless known to your Excellency, that the Sikh religion, in itself a modern religion, has a tendency to throw off sub-sects which adopt considerable novelties of doctrine and practice. And in fact it would seem that the same process goes on all over India and even in provinces little affected by education and by the indirect influence of Christianity. The immobility of Native religions, no doubt, exists, but it exists within shifting limits, and there is much more formation of new creeds and practices than primâ facie appears. Now to all these new religious communities the legal doctrine of the Advocate General applies. One reason, however, why we should remove the difficulty is that, in my humble judgment, it is entirely of our own creation. It must strike every observant man that, by our introduction of legal ideas and our administration of justice through regular courts, we give a solidity and rigidity to Native usage, which it does not naturally possess. It seems to me that, in order to prevent the monstrous injustice which occasionally results from this process, we must control it by the proper instrument—timely legislation.

Sir, I now proceed to the principal objections which have been raised against the measure. In front of these I place the objection that it does not apply to Christians. Now, Sir, every imputation that this Government intends to establish an inequality between different classes of Her Majesty's subjects is serious, and therefore I am much indebted to those who have pointed out that this objection rests upon misapprehension. The words which render the Bill inapplicable to persons professing the Christian religion are taken from the Statute 14 & 15 Vic., c. 40, which regulates the civil marriage of Christians in India. It was necessary to keep the two systems of registration apart, since it would generally not be convenient for Native gentlemen and ladies to have recourse to the Registrar appointed under the Statute. But the principle of the present measure is to place Natives as nearly as possible on the same footing as Europeans.

Sir, the next objection—and no doubt this is a more genuine and sincere objection—is that civil marriage is quite modern in Europe, and that India may not be sufficiently advanced to dispense with the necessity of the forms of a religious marriage. The fallacy of the argument does not lie in the misstatement of the fact, but in the application of it, and in the assumption that it has any relevancy to the condition of India. It is true that civil marriage, which was once an universal institution of the Western World, disappeared for several centuries, and was only revived about a hundred years ago by the Emperor Joseph II in the hereditary states of the House of Austria. Probably, the last relics of the absolute obligation of religious marriage are at this moment disappearing in Spain. But the theory which imposed religious marriage in Europe has never had any counterpart in India. In European countries the legislator believed, or professed to believe, that some one religion was true, and could alone impart efficacy to the rites by which marriage was celebrated. That was his justification, whatever it was worth. For the protection of that one religion, and in its interest, he compelled everybody to submit to its ceremonial. But there never has been anything like this in India under the British Government, and whatever were the theory of the Muhammadans, there was nothing like it in their practice. It is a famous saying of a well known French Statesman, that "the law should be atheistic." Well, if the expression be permissible, the law of marriage has in this country always been atheistic, in the sense that it has been perfectly indifferent between several religions of which no two could be true. One may be true, but not two. This peculiarity of Indian law results in the rule that a man may at pleasure desert the religion in which he was born and contract a civil marriage. A Hindú can become a Christian or a Muhammadan, or he may adopt the Fetichism of the Kóls or Sánthals, and he can contract a lawful marriage. But if he stops short of that, as the law stands, marriage is denied to him. Take the case of a Hindú becoming Muhammadan, a kind of conversion which goes on every day of our lives. The convert is compelled by the principles of his new religion to regard the faith of his ancestors as hateful and contemptible. But if he does not go so far as that, if he retains some tenderness for his old faith, and continues to regard it as not absolutely evil he is debarred from all share in the fundamental institution of organized civil society. Such a state of the law is unexampled in Europe. Nothing in the Western World has any relevancy towards it or bearing on it.

I now pass to another objection, which is no doubt sincerely advanced. It is said that we are bound to protect the Native religions to the extent of forbidding their adherents to desert them, except for a recognised religion. There is no doubt that there is some sort of indirect protection to Native religions given by this state of the law of marriage in the existing condition of Native society. Now, can we continue this protection? I think we cannot. Take the case of the applicants for the present measure. They say that the ritual to which they must conform, if they wish to contract lawful marriages, is idolatrous. I don't use the word offensively, but merely in the sense in which a lawyer in the High Court is occasionally obliged to speak of the family idol. They say that the existing Hindú ceremonial of marriage implies belief in the existence or power of, and worship addressed to, idols. No doubt there are some of the Brahmos who have as little belief in these beings as the applicants, but still do not object to go through the ritual; and, naturally enough, they exhibit considerable impatience at the scruples of their co-religionists. But that is only a part of the inevitable history of opinion. The first step is to disbelieve; the next to be ashamed of the profession of belief. The applicants allege that their consciences are hurt and injured by joining in a ritual which implies belief in that which they do not believe. Now, can we compel them to submit to this ritual? Sir, nobody can feel more strongly than I do, that we are bound to refrain from interfering with Native religious opinions, simply on the ground that those opinions are not ours, and that we are bound to respect the practices, which are the expression of those opinions, so long as they do not violate decency and public order. That is the condition of our government in this country. I will even go further and say that, where a part of a community come forward and allege that they are the most enlightened members of it, and call on us to forbid a practice which their advanced ideas lead them to think injurious to their civilization, the Government should still be cautious. This is the case of those enlightened gentlemen who ask us to abolish polygamy, both as regards themselves and as regards their less informed co-religionists who do not agree with them. Here the Government of India, acting in concurrence with the Government of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, has declined to listen to the petition, much as may be said for it. Here, however, we have a very different case. A number of gentlemen come forward and ask to be relieved from the necessity of submitting to rites against which their own conscience rebels. They do not ask to impose their ideas on others, but to be relieved from a burthen which presses on themselves. Can we refuse the relief? I think we cannot. I think the point is here reached at which it is impossible for us to forget, that we do not ourselves believe in the existence or virtue or power of the beings in whose honour this ritual is constructed. And I say this the more confidently, because I believe that such a doctrine is in the true interest of the sincere believers in Native religions. If we once begin trampling on the rights of conscience, it is very far from certain that the process will continue for the advantage of Native religions. The members of these communities have the strongest reason for maintaining the absolute sacredness of the rights of conscience.

I now pass to a few verbal criticisms, for some of which there is foundation. It is objected that it is doubtful whether, in section 1, clause 2, the word 'unmarried' includes a widow. I do not feel any doubt myself as to the interpretation which a Court would put on the word, but it can be made still clearer in Select Committee. The words "without having been lawfully divorced," in section 8, have also attracted notice, and it has been asked whether the Government is about to propose a law of divorce. The words, I apprehend, must stand, because the measure may possibly apply to sects who have a law of divorce, and, indeed, even among the Brahmos, there are (I am informed) some Muhammadans whom it is not proposed to deprive of any of their privileges, except in so far as they are modified by this measure. So far as concerns the Hindús, there is not, on the part of your Excellency's Government, any intention to propose a law of divorce for them, and I am told that the Brahmos do not consider their sect sufficiently advanced for such a law.

Another objection which requires attention is that the Bill does not compel the Registrar to go to the house of the persons intending to marry. There is nothing to prevent his going, but it is said that he may demand an exorbitant fee as the price of his presence. That may be set right by a provision that he shall attend at the house of the marrying parties, on a fee being paid somewhat in excess of the ordinary fee.

Sir, I now come to a difficulty of which I myself have, from the first, felt the seriousness. When I obtained leave to introduce the Bill, I stated that I was not satisfied with the table of prohibited degrees. It was introduced at the suggestion of the applicants, and represents, I believe, the ideas of educated Hindús of some social position in Bengal. But it does not accord with Muhammadan ideas, and still less with the usage of Hindús beyond Bengal. The petition of the British Indian Association objects to the Bill that it legalizes marriages between members of different castes. The gentlemen who have joined in that petition have, however, too good legal advice to be ignorant that, though intermarriages between the castes are no doubt improper according to Hindú notions, there has always, and everywhere, been a doubt whether the impropriety amounted to illegality. I am not now speaking of this class of prohibitions, but of the prohibitions in force in large portions of Upper India. These are extremely numerous and complex, and turn not so much on proximity of blood as on tribal relation. The whole subject is one of some interest, and has been lately examined by a member of my own profession, Mr. Maclellan. Reasonable or unreasonable, these prohibitions are tenaciously adhered to by certain of the Natives of Upper India, and would no doubt be enforced by the Courts. The difficulty of constructing a table of prohibited degrees, which would suit all Natives of India, is so enormous, that I am inclined to suggest, for the consideration of the Select Committee, a provision that nobody shall be allowed to marry, under the new law, any man or woman whom she or he might not lawfully have married if the law had not passed. This will enable us to get rid of the schedule altogether. I am the more inclined to recommend this course, because I do not think that the table of prohibited degrees in use in the Western World can be defended on grounds universally applicable. It seems to me that such a table can only be constructed on two sets of principles. Either it may be framed on physiological considerations, or on considerations arising from the feelings, or it may be prejudices, of the community affected. No doubt, our English table is very much more liberal than any that could be framed for India. But it can hardly be said to be constructed on physiological principles, for if it were, I presume a man would be allowed to marry his deceased wife's sister, and it is probable that the marriages of first cousins would be prohibited. Everybody knows that this permission and prohibition are always defended on peculiarities in the social organization of Western society. I will further allege, as a reason for the provision I suggest, that when civil marriage was introduced into England about forty years ago, the area of intermarriage was not enlarged. A man could no more than before marry his deceased wife's sister, nor could a person, ecclesiastically divorced, marry without a special Act of Parliament. European precedents are, therefore, in favour of the course which I am inclined to propose, and which amounts to limiting the measure for the present to the relief of conscience. I do not deny that this change will to some extent diminish the liberality of the Bill, but it removes a very serious difficulty, and I find that the Brahmos themselves do not wish the power of intermarriage to be enlarged, having always confined themselves within the boundaries of the existing laws. I believe, too, that our Hon'ble Colleague, the Mahárájá of Balrámpúr, will have his only objection to the Bill removed by this alteration. It is necessary, however, for me to say that the section I suggest must be very carefully framed. The prohibition of marriage which it will recognise, must not be one dependent on the performance of any religious ceremonial, or the whole measure may be defeated.

Sir, I have to state in conclusion that, in my humble opinion, there can be no worse penalty on improper marriages than the disallowance of such marriages. Such a penalty has almost no characteristic which should distinguish a penalty. As regards those persons who directly join in the supposed offence, it falls on the more scrupulous and leaves the less scrupulous untouched. But in fact it hardly falls on the supposed offenders at all. It is really imposed on the children, who are dishonoured through life for an offence in which they could not possibly have participated. If it be really necessary for us to protect the Native religions by forbidding marriages not celebrated with their rites, it is much better that we should effect this by any direct civil penalty or if necessary criminal penalty, rather than by the disallowance of the marriage."

MR. MAINE then said that three petitions had been presented against the Bill, one from the Parsís, which would probably be met by the concession he had proposed. There was another from the British Indian Association, which was in fact a petition against Act XXI of 1850, and which in effect claimed that the majority of the members of every religious community should have absolute power to compel the minority to follow all received ceremonial. A third petition was from certain Native gentlemen at Bombay, who begged that the Bill might not be proceeded with till they had had an opportunity of stating their objections to it. MR. MAINE would cheerfully have complied with this request, and it would be seen that he had proposed a long date for the Report of the Select Committee, in order that Native opinion might declare itself. But MR. MAINE had brought on the measure in order that it might be discussed by the public in connection with the changes which he had proposed to-day.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

ARTICLES OF WAR BILL.

The Hon'ble COLONEL NORMAN moved that the Bill to consolidate and amend the Articles of War for the Government of Her Majesty's Native Indian Forces, which he had the honour to introduce on the 4th instant, be referred to a Select Committee with instructions to report in two months. He said that the objects and reasons of the Bill had already been explained to the Council; he would not therefore occupy the time of the Council any further.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

HIGH COURT (N. W. P.) CRIMINAL PROCEDURE BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE moved that the Bill further to amend the Criminal Procedure of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, be referred to a Select Committee with instructions to report in a month. He said that, as the law stood, when an European British subject and a Native were jointly charged with an offence, and committed for trial to the High Court for the North-Western Provinces, they must be tried separately, and in each trial a different procedure was followed—the European being tried in exercise of the Court's ordinary, while the Native was tried in exercise of its extraordinary, criminal jurisdiction.

This state of things having been found to cause practical inconvenience, the present Bill had been framed at the desire of the Local Government. The Bill simply enacted that such persons so charged might be tried together and by the same procedure, but gave the Native the option (which it was unlikely he would often exercise) of refusing to be tried by a jury, the majority of which are Europeans or Americans.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The following Select Committees were named:—

On the Bill to legalize marriages between certain Natives of India not professing the Christian Religion—the Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell, the Hon'ble Sir George Couper. the Hon'ble Mahárájá Sir Dirg-Bijay Singh, and the Hon'ble Messrs. Shaw Stewart, Forbes and the Mover.

On the Bill to consolidate and amend the Articles of War for the Government of Her Majesty's Native Indian Forces—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, the Hon'ble Messrs. Maine and Cockerell, the Hon'ble Sir George Couper and the Hon'ble Messrs. Shaw Stewart, Forbes and the Mover.

On the Bill further to amend the Criminal Procedure of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces—the Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell, and the Hon'ble Sir George Couper and the Mover.

The Council adjourned till the 4th December 1868.

FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT.

CIRCULATION OF CURRENCY NOTES IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.

No. 1566, dated 24th October, 1868.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Government of Bombay, Financial Dept.

Read again—

The Proceedings in this Department, No. 1282, dated 28th August 1868, regarding the returns showing the receipt and issue of Currency Notes from the Civil Treasuries of this Presidency during the half-year ending 30th June 1867.

Read also the following papers on the subject:—

Letter from the Accountant General, No 1977G, dated 11th September 1868, with enclosures.
" to the Accountant General, No. 251[illegible], dated 21st September 1868.
" from the Accountant General, No. 2167G, dated 28th September 1868, with enclosures.

RESOLUTION.—These returns exhibit the result of the unrestricted issue of Currency Notes from the Mofussil Treasuries during a period of six months from 1st June to 30th November 1867.

2. Several discrepancies in these returns, as compared with information given in the 6th paragraph of the Accountant General's letter No. 1651G, dated 14th August 1868, having now been explained, the result of the experiment may be described as follows.

3. According to the information given in paragraph 6 of the Accountant General's letter, it appears that the demands from eight* treasuries, amounting to Rs. 4,98,250, were complied with in full, whereas in the remaining ten treasuries the indents, which amounted to Rs. 9,60,250, were complied with only to the extent of Rs. 6,15,350, or about two-thirds.

*1. Belgaum.	5. Hyderabad.
2 Kaira.	6. Tanna.
3. Poona.	7. Shikarpoor.
4. Bushire.	8. Baroda.

4. It will be right to omit Kurrachee from consideration at present, as its circumstances are different from those of the other Mofussil Treasuries. There remain twenty treasuries from which reports have been received.

5. It appears that on the 1st June 1867, the balance of Notes in hand in these twenty treasuries amounted to	Rs. 4,35,770
During the six months from June to December, there were received on indent from Bombay ...	" 9,76,490
Received in exchange for cash	" 2,40,510
Received in payment of Government dues or otherwise	" 7,65,420
Giving a total of Notes available for circulation in the Mofussil	" 24,18,190
6. On the other hand, it appears that during this period of six months there were issued in payment of claims on Government Notes to the value of	" 7,42,700
And in exchange for cash	" 9,34,540
Remitted to Bombay by the District Treasuries in Tanna	" 3,66,870

while there remained in the treasuries a balance of about 3¾ lakhs worth of Notes.

7. It is satisfactory to observe that while about sixteen lakhs of Rupees worth of Notes were issued from the treasuries in exchange for cash, or in payment of claims on Government, Notes to the value of upwards of ten lakhs were received in exchange for cash and in payment of Government demands. This shows a circulation far in excess of that reported in 1866.

8. As directed in Government letter No. 25P of the 21st September last, similar returns, in the form now submitted by the Accountant General, should be kept from the 1st July to the 31st December 1868, and the Governor in Council trusts that the returns will be submitted punctually and without the delay that has occurred in the present instance.

9. These proceedings should be reported to the Government of India and to the Secretary of State, and may be published as a supplement to the Government Gazette.

ORDERED, that copies of the above be forwarded to the Accountant General, the Revenue Commissioner, Southern Division, the Revenue Commissioner, Northern Division, the Commissioner in Sind, all Collectors and Officers in charge of Political Treasuries, with copies of the papers.

Submitted to the Government of India, with copies of the papers.

No. 1282, dated 28th August 1868.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Government of Bombay, in the Financial Dept.

Read the following:—

Letter from C. E. CHAPMAN, Esq., Officiating Accountant General, to the Chief Secretary to Government, Bombay, No. 1651G, dated 14th August 1868.

With reference to your letter No. 15P, dated 30th July 1867, and Government endorsement No. 1546, dated 18th December last, I have the honor to submit, for the information of His Excellency the Governor in Council, a statement showing the receipt and issue of Currency Notes at and from the Civil Treasuries of this Presidency during the half-year ending 30th November last.

2. The Treasury Officers noted in the margin having omitted to exhibit in their statements the value of Notes received and issued by them during the period of experiment, the transactions in reference to those treasuries have not been included in the General Statement. The officers have, however, been called upon to submit amended returns, on receipt of which a supplemental statement will be forwarded to Government.

Poona.
Canara.
Shikarpoor.

3. It will appear from the Statement that the issue of Notes of all denominations in exchange for coin from almost all the treasuries exceeds the receipt of Notes cashed, the inference is that the Notes exchanged for cash were chiefly employed for remittance purposes.

4. I beg to remark that had it not been necessary to retain large balances in the Mofussil Treasuries to meet the demands thereon in connection with the Abyssinian Expedition, the accumulation of coin would have been inconveniently large, and it would have been necessary to bring the surplus thus caused to the presidency at a heavy expense to the State.

5. The indents for Notes from the Mofussil Treasuries have been complied with to the full extent, with exception, however, of those of the Remitting Treasuries, as a full compliance would have caused a large influx of coin, eventually necessitating its removal to Bombay.

6. The subjoined Statement will show the amounts indented for, and those authorized by this Department, during the half-year under report:—

Treasuries.	Amounts indented for.	Amounts authorized.
Poona	2,74,000	2,74,000
Canara	90,000	80,000
Belgaum	98,000	98,000
Sattara	75,000	75,000
Bushire	30,000	30,000
Dharwar	2,75,000	1,30,500
Tanna	11,000	11,000
Candeish	1,03,000	75,000
Rutnagherry	43,000	28,000
Surat	50,000	38,100
Ahmednuggur	1,74,000	75,000
Baroda	50,000	50,000
Kaira	6,750	6,750
Ahmedabad	70,000	48,000
Kulladghee	65,000	55,500
Kattywar	15,250	12,250
Hyderabad	23,500	23,500
Shikarpoor	5,000	5,000

7. There being a Currency Office at Kurrachee, the Treasury Officer at that station should, I think, be enjoined to cease issuing Notes for cash, as the transaction legitimately pertains to the Office of Issue.

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council has much pleasure in publishing for general information a Proclamation issued by His Highness the Maharana of Oodeypore:—

Translation of a Notification issued by the Meywar Durbar to all the Officials of the State,—dated Oodeypore, 5th November 1868.

Owing to the continued drought, there is a great scarcity of grain this year in Meywar, and in consequence high prices prevail, it is therefore necessary and incumbent to afford assistance to the subjects of the State; under these considerations, orders have already been issued remitting the Customs and Mappa Dues on grain throughout Meywar. In addition to this measure, the restrictions on the exportation of grain from Meywar have also been removed, and orders issued that no restriction whatever be put on the grain trade.

It is now hereby promulgated for general information that up to Assar,* Sood Poonun, Sumbut 1925, no duty will be levied on grain exported from, or imported into, Meywar, or on grain from Foreign territory passing through Meywar.

* About July or August 1869.

The district officials are directed to report the quantity of surplus grain within their respective districts after allowing for sowing and consumption of the people of the districts.

All the district authorities are hereby enjoined to watch over the interests of the people under their charge, and to assist them by supplying grain for food and sowing. Those of the cultivators who are poor, indigent, and unable to pay the Government demand, are to be treated with leniency, and the demand deferred until it can be met, so that they and their children may escape the impending distress.

It is further ordered that the district authorities are to arrange for the construction of works of utility, such as roads, embankments for tanks, wells, &c., to employ the strong and able-bodied men in order to afford them a maintenance and to carry out the works of utility as well.

A charitable subscription has been raised at Oodeypore, and it is therefore hoped that the Chiefs and Nobles of Meywar will establish similar institutions in their respective estates.

And lastly be it known to all the Lunjaras and dealers in grain that, in accordance with the precept of their respective religions, they are to trade in grain without fear and misgiving. No restriction will be imposed, nor interference on the part of the Durbar or its officials permitted in the grain trade.

MILITARY, No. 382. INDIA OFFICE; London, 31st October 1868.

To His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council.

SIR,—As it appears from recent circumstances that an impression exists in India that Officers Commanding Divisions and Brigades whose leave of absence on sick certificate with retention of appointment is limited to six months, and who may come to this country for that period, are not required to produce evidence of physical fitness for duty before being allowed to return to India, I request that you will notify to the Army at large that all Officers, however employed, and whatever may be the amount of leave granted them, who leave India on sick certificate, are required to produce a certificate of fitness for duty before they can be allowed to return.

I have, &c.,
STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA, ASSEMBLED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF PARLIAMENT, 24 & 25 VIC., CAP. 67.

The Council met at Government House on Friday, the 4th December 1868.

PRESENT:

The Hon'ble G. Noble Taylor.
The Hon'ble H. Sumner Maine.
The Hon'ble John Strachey.
The Hon'ble Colonel H. W. Norman, C. B.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.
The Hon'ble Sir George Couper, Bart., C. B.
The Hon'ble Mahárájá Sir Dirg-Bijay Singh, Bahádur, K. C. S. I. of Balrámpúr.
The Hon'ble Gordon S. Forbes.
The Hon'ble D. Cowie.
The Hon'ble M. J. Shaw Stewart.

The Hon'ble MR. SHAW STEWART took the oath of allegiance, and the oath that he would faithfully discharge the duties of his office.

EVIDENCE BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE moved that the Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence be referred to a Select Committee with instructions to report in two months. He said that the Council were no doubt aware that, on referring a Bill to a Select Committee, what was affirmed was the principle of the measure or the expediency of legislation within the general principles of the measure. This being understood, MR. MAINE did not suppose that the Council would ever seriously think of refusing to refer to a Select Committee a Bill prepared by the Indian Law Commissioners, and therefore he should say very little in commending it to the Council. The consideration of the measure was essentially a consideration of its detail, and to that detail the Select Committee would doubtless give the most careful attention, not, as

MR. MAINE hoped, for the purpose of setting its judgment against the judgment of the Commissioners in matters which lay legitimately within the sphere of their great judicial and forensic experience, but for the purpose of seeing whether their specific proposals required in any way restriction or extension with regard to the special circumstances and facts of this country.

On the general expediency of obtaining a codified law of evidence for India, MR. MAINE did not suppose that there could be two opinions. He ventured to think that the Commissioners had, if anything, rather understated the grounds on which such a law was desirable. They observed that India did not possess any uniform law on the subject. After stating that within the Presidency towns the English law of evidence was in force, modified by certain Acts of the Indian legislature of which Act II of 1855 was the most important, they went on to say that a customary law of evidence prevailed in those parts of British India where English law was not administered. "This customary law," they added—

"has not assumed any definite form; the Mahomedan law, since the enactment of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, has ceased to have any validity in the country courts, even in criminal matters; and those courts have in fact no fixed rules of evidence except those contained in Act II of 1855. They are not required to follow the English law as such, although they are not debarred from following it where they regard it as the most equitable."

On looking, however, at the two Indian Evidence Acts, it would seem that they implied that the English law of evidence, except where they modified it, was in force in the bulk of India, the Mofussil. During the last ten or fifteen years the doctrine that the English law of evidence was vi propriâ in force throughout the whole of the country had certainly gained strength, and the habit of applying that law with increasing strictness was gaining ground. No doubt much evidence was received by the Mofussil Courts which the English Courts would not regard as strictly admissible. But MR. MAINE would appeal to Members of Council who had more experience in the Mofussil than he had, his hon'ble friends Sir George Couper and Mr. Cockerell, whether the Judges of those Courts did not as a matter of fact believe that it was their duty to administer the English law of evidence as modified by the Evidence Acts. In particular, MR. MAINE was informed that when a case was argued by a barrister before a Mofussil Judge, and when the English rules of evidence were pressed on his attention, he did practically accept those rules, and admit or reject evidence according to his construction of them.

MR. MAINE could not help regarding this state of things as eminently unsatisfactory. He entirely agreed with the Commissioners that there were parts of the English law of evidence which were not suited to this country. They heard much of the laxity with which evidence was admitted in the Mofussil Courts, but the truth was that this laxity was to a considerable extent justifiable. The evil, it appeared to MR. MAINE, lay less in admitting evidence which under strict rules of admissibility should be rejected, than in admitting and rejecting evidence without fixed rules to govern admission and rejection. Anything like a capricious administration of the law of evidence was an evil, but it would be an equal, or perhaps even a greater, evil that such strict rules of evidence should be enforced as practically to leave the Court without the materials for a decision. MR. MAINE would venture to state his impression that the fault of substance ordinarily committed by the Mofussil Courts consisted less in lax admission of evidence, than in averting their attention from the evidence really before them, and in conjecturing the facts of the case upon probabilities derived from a consideration of what the Natives of this country would be likely to do under given circumstances. Another objection lay in the necessity which the Mofussil Judges were thus placed under of depending upon English textbooks. There were excellent textbooks of the English law of evidence, but their usefulness consisted more in refreshing knowledge which had been gained by forensic experience, than in teaching knowledge. The Commissioners would appear to be right in supposing that what was wanted for the greatest part of India, was a liberalized version of the English law of evidence, enacted with authority and thus excluding caprice, and superseding the use of textbooks by compactness and precision.

Another objection which MR. MAINE entertained to the present state of the law might appear to be speculative, but was really of some practical moment. The doctrine that the English law of evidence without authoritative enactment prevailed vi propriâ and of its own virtue, was calculated to encourage the notion that rules of evidence constituted a scientific machinery by which truth as to facts and as to men's actions could be ascertained somewhat as physical truths could be ascertained by the processes in use among men of science. There were certain Continental systems of evidence which did make a pretension to include a process of the kind. And perhaps some such theory did pervade the rules of the English law with regard to presumptions, which he was happy to see the Commissioners had discarded. But the English law of evidence as a whole made no claim to be such a system. It was justly regarded by English lawyers as a model of good sense; but it would probably have never come into existence but for one peculiarity of the English judicial administration,—the separation of the judge of law from the judge of fact, of the Judge from the Jury. It consisted mainly of rules of exclusion, that is, of rules for keeping certain kinds of evidence out of sight of the judge of fact. Such a system, MR. MAINE apprehended, could only be justified on two grounds. First of all, some evidence must be excluded. If all evidence were admitted, nay, even if all relevant evidence were admitted, if everything were let in which tended to throw light on the matters in issue, the Courts would be overwhelmed. Even in England they would break down, and it would be quite impossible for the Courts to discharge their functions in this country with the notorious habit of its Natives of attempting to help on the proof by accumulating everything which has even the remotest bearing on it. It being, then, assumed that, under the actual conditions of judicial enquiry, some sorts of evidence must necessarily be shut out, the English law excluded those descriptions of evidence which were found practically to affect the minds of all men, except those of the most sagacious judgment, out of all proportion to the real value of such evidence. This was the case of the great department known to English lawyers as 'hearsay.' It was not at all meant that hearsay evidence was not incidentally valuable, and MR. MAINE could well imagine a great Indian statesman conducted in an emergency to a most important conclusion by evidence which a court of justice would reject as absolutely inadmissible. But, taking men as you found them, and taking the average of judicial ability, it was really true that some kinds of evidence did produce an impression on the mind far deeper than was consistent with their real weight. The good sense to which the English law laid claim was evinced by the tests which it laid down for distinguishing those kinds of evidence from those which remained. It would be presumptuous in MR. MAINE to praise the Commissioners' proposals, but he ventured to say that, in his humble opinion, they had wisely availed themselves of the results of English experience, but had wisely modified those results upon two considerations, which they stated as follows:—

"The English practice has been moulded in a great degree by our social and legal institutions and our forms of procedure; and much of it is admitted to be unsuited to the various states of society and the different forms of property which are to be met with in India."

"In a country like India, where the task of judicial investigation is attended with peculiar difficulties, and where it is the duty of the Judge in all civil and in some criminal cases to decide without a jury, there is greater danger of miscarriage from the mind of the Court being uninformed than from its being unduly influenced by the information laid before it."

MR. MAINE had said that he would not comment on the details of the measure, but there was one point of detail which it was necessary to notice, because, as it involved a financial question, the Select Committee would probably not like to deal with it without knowing the opinion of the Executive Government. The Commissioners' draft and the Bill based upon it saved the Registration Act; but it would be observed that they did not refer to the Stamp Act. The omission in the Bill was explained by its being doubtful whether the Stamp Bill now in the hands of Mr. Cockerell would or would not receive the assent of the Governor General before the present measure. If the Stamp Bill were passed last, it would control the present measure. But another reason must probably be assigned for the omission in the Commissioners' draft, which appeared to be deliberate. MR. MAINE found that the last paragraph of their third Report, on the Law of Negotiable Instruments, was to the following effect:—

"Negotiable instruments have recently been subjected to a stamp duty in British India by an Act which, like the English Stamp Act, renders instruments invalid if its regulations are not observed. This provision of the English Stamp Act has led to the establishment of several rules and distinctions not unattended with inconvenience, and we would suggest that a law which merely imposed a penalty in case of infringement would be more conducive to the public interests. For the present, we have thought it our best course to frame our rules irrespectively of the stamp law."

Now from the Commissioners' point of view, which was the purely juridical point of view, there was no doubt that simplicity would be attained by the course proposed. But what would be the practical effect? His hon'ble friend Mr. Cockerell had had a vast mass of papers before him relating to the operation of the Stamp law. MR. MAINE appealed to him whether the following was not a fair inference from those papers. If effect were given to the Commissioners' suggestion, either there would be an enormous evasion of the law, or that evasion would be prevented by recourse to the criminal Courts for the enforcement of penalties to an extent which would itself be a greater evil than the sacrifice of any branch of revenue. Under those circumstances, the point had been considered by the Executive Government, and MR. MAINE had to state that, having regard to the fact that the stamp duties on commercial instruments were easily levied, and did not press hardly on the people, the Government was not prepared to give up that portion of the public receipts.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

DIVORCE BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE also moved that the Hon'ble Sir George Couper and the Hon'ble Messrs. Gordon Forbes and Shaw Stewart be added to the Select Committee on the Bill for conferring upon the High Courts of Judicature in India the jurisdiction and powers vested in the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England. He said that though this matter did not permit any discussion, he would, with His Excellency's permission, explain that the Committee had made a preliminary report at Simla recommending the subject for further consideration at Calcutta. The amended Bill had in fact been sent to the learned Judges of the High Courts, from whom valuable suggestions might possibly be received. There was, however, one imperative reason why the Committee should sit again. The operation of the amended Bill was confined to cases where the husband was a Christian whose marriage had been solemnized in India and who at the date of the marriage had his domicile in India and retained that domicile down to the institution of the suit. This limitation was occasioned by what, when the Committee reported, was believed to be the state of the English law. The balance of legal opinion certainly inclined to the view that the English Courts would not recognise divorces pronounced by foreign courts where the parties had contracted marriage in England. But this doctrine had recently been disturbed by a decision of the House of Lords, which, as was often the case in English law, had come as a surprise on the legal profession. The Select Committee would have carefully to consider the judgment of Lord Westbury in Shaw v. Gould, 3 Law Reports, English and Irish Appeals, p. 80, and would probably be of opinion that the measure might be made applicable to classes who, as the measure was at present framed, were excluded from its operation.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The following Select Committee was named:—

On the Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence—The Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell, the Hon'ble Sir George Couper, and the Hon'ble Messrs. Gordon Forbes, Shaw Stewart and the Mover.

The Council adjourned till the 11th December 1868.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

FOREIGN DEPARTMENT.

LATE CAMPAIGN IN HAZARA.

No. 958-446, dated 6th November, 1868.

From—T. H. THORNTON, ESQ., Secretary to the Government of the Punjab,
To—The Secretary to the Government of India, FOREIGN DEPT.

Your letter No. 996, dated 8th September, conveyed the sanction of the Government of India to the despatch of a military force for the punishment of certain independent tribes on the Hazara border, for their invasion of British territory, their attempt to destroy the police post at Oghí, in the Agrore valley, and their subsequent hostile proceedings, as detailed in my letter No. 334, dated 31st August, and previous correspondence.

2. You further conveyed the instructions of His Excellency the Viceroy in Council to the effect "that the efforts of the avenging force should be limited to what was essentially necessary for the accomplishment of the object in view, as well as to what might be feasible, with reference to the character of the mountainous country in which operations would have to be carried on; that care should be taken to respect the possessions of all adjacent tribes who might not have joined, or who might subsequently not join, the enemy; and that in the event of its being necessary to march through the lands of non-offending tribes, arrangements should be made to give them assurances beforehand, that no hostile measures against them were intended."

3. I have now the honor to report that, in accordance with the above instructions, a military force was assembled at Oghí under the direction of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and the command of Major General Wilde, C. B.; that the force left its camp at Oghí on 3rd October, accompanied by Major Pollock, Commissioner of the Peshawar Division, and Captain Ommanney, Deputy Commissioner of Hazara; marched up the slopes of the Black Mountain and occupied the Machai peak, 10,200 feet above the level of the sea, after ineffectual resistance on the part of the enemy, and returned to British territory viâ Tikrí and Nandihar on the 20th instant, after having secured the formal submission of all the tribes concerned against us, and all men of note save the chief Sayad of Purári and a petty chief named Shál Khán of Takôt, an insignificant section of the Swátís, both of whom fled on the approach of our troops; the latter, across the Indus.

4. The details of the expedition in its military aspect will be reported by Major General Wilde through His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. Its political history is reported in the accompanying copy of Major Pollock's letter dated 31st October, and enclosures; and amongst the latter will be found a report by Lieutenant Colonel Johnstone of the Hazara Survey (who accompanied the expedition), describing the tracts of country visited, as also one by Mr. Ribbentrop of the Forest Department, describing the geological features and timber resources of the Black Mountain.

A map of the country, prepared under the direction of Lieutenant Colonel Johnstone, is also forwarded in original.

5. The narrative of the proceedings of the Commissioner, and the grounds on which they have been based, are stated with so much clearness in Major Pollock's report that with the help of the Appendices and the additional light thrown upon the whole by General Wilde's despatches, His Honor trusts the Supreme Government will have no difficulty in following the entire course of the negociations entered into by the Commissioner, in communication with the General Commanding; the views by which he has been guided, and the results attained.

The several matters referred to in Major Pollock's 56th paragraph, together with a statement of the amount of fines levied from the independent Swátí tribes, which has not been mentioned in the accompanying report, and any other points on which further information may appear to be required, will be reported on hereafter; more especially the permanent reward to be conferred on the loyal and gallant Nawáb of Amb, and the mode in which the Ex-Khan of Agrore is to be dealt with.

6. It will be perceived that of the Pathán tribes of the Black Mountain, the Hussunzais, whose country was invaded by us in 1852, have not only from the first held aloof as a tribe from the hostile measures of others adjoining them—however strong a feeling of sympathy a portion may at first have evinced—but even before the Hazara force assembled, entered into friendly negociations with the Khan of Amb, which greatly disconcerted and disheartened the Swátí tribes, then most actively opposed to us, and subsequently prevented sympathizers of cognate tribes, on the right bank of the Indus, from crossing over. The Khán Kheyl section alone of this tribe, who are closely connected by marriage with the Khán of Agrore, form an exception; this section having been arrayed against us at the period of the outbreak, and for some time afterwards.

7. Two Pathán tribes only have from the first been considered to be clearly implicated, viz., the Akazais and Chuggarzais. But to these must be added their spiritual advisers the Purári Sayads, who, from being closely connected in many ways with the Khán of Agrore, have taken a very prominent part throughout, insomuch that they must be regarded as the principal instigators, next to the Agrore Khán himself; and amongst the chief actors in all the hostilities which have occurred, the Akazais would appear to have taken a somewhat leading part on this occasion, as well as to have been generally insolent in their bearing heretofore, as described in the 8th and 35th paragraphs of Major Pollock's report. But of the Chuggarzais, who are a trading, and for the most part peaceful tribe, but few are ultimately found to have participated, save those in the immediate employ of the Purári Sayads.

8. The independent Swátí tribes bordering on Hazara are four: the Deshís, the Nandiharis, the people of Tikrí, and of Allai; of these, the first three have been implicated in hostile proceedings, especially the people of Nandihar and Tikrí; while the Allahies, the most numerous and important of all, have, as a tribe, held aloof, though a small section of them were concerned in the attack on the Assistant Surveyor Mr. Scott, for which they will be separately called to account. Ata Muhammad Khán, the Ex-Chief of Agrore, being a Swátí, these tribes naturally were more disposed and eager to take up his cause than most of the Pathán tribes adjoining. They are not acknowledged by Patháns as belonging to their body, though they speak the Pushtu language, and formerly possessed the valley of Swát, from which they were driven out by the ancestors of the Patháns, who now occupy it. They are at the same time less warlike in character than the Patháns even of the Cis-Indus, who are less so, as a rule, than those Trans-Indus; and there is but little of cordiality or mutual confidence between the Swátís and Patháns; as was shown by the dismay and distrust evinced by the former when the Hussunzais began to treat with the Khán of Amb.

9. Hence it early became apparent to the local officers that the Swátís should be dealt with apart, and in a different manner from the Patháns. They began to show alarm at the results of the course they had taken as soon as they became aware of the firm resolution of Government to punish them. The people of Tikrí and Nandihar spontaneously proffered payment of fines to expiate their offence, and even commenced to distribute amongst the members of their tribes, according to the means of each, the sums which they were led to suppose would be required of them; and by the time the Hazara force was prepared to advance, the representatives of these two tribes had come in, and engaged to hold aloof—sending hostages to accompany our troops during their ascent up the Black Mountain. The Deshís at first hesitated, but so soon as our troops reached the top of the range, they were the first to come in, which completed the submission of all the Swátís whom it was deemed necessary to coerce.

10. The only exception to this, as stated above, was a small body of men attached to Shál Khán of Takôt, the occupants of which place appear to be an offshoot from the Deshís. This man, though not the real chief of Takôt, has managed by force of personal character or otherwise to assume a permanent position, and a certain amount of ascendancy in this small tract; and being in some way specially connected with the Agrore Khán, he took a decided part against us. He appears also to have relied on the inaccessibility of the place, and the facility of escape afforded by its position immediately over the left bank of the Indus, where that river rounds the northern extremity of the Black Mountain range; and refused to the last to come in, when summoned; fleeing ultimately, when threatened, across the Indus with his family and goods.

11. On the offending Swátí tribes, fines aggregating Rs. 7,000 have been inflicted, according to the circumstances of the case of each, and their respective ability to pay them, so far as a judgment on this point could be formed. Besides which, after taking from them hostages to accompany our force, the latter marched in strength through the greater part of their territory; while on a shot being fired at a rear guard on entering Nandihar, the heads of the village, though not the real offenders, were held responsible, and made to pay an additional fine of Rs. 500 on reaching Abbottabad.

12. Shál Khán of Takôt and his immediate followers are the only Swátís who have not as yet either surrendered or been punished. The reasons why it has not been thought worth while to adopt special measures to coerce him by actual force are explained in paragraphs 48 to 50 of the Commissioner's report. But he will not be lost sight of. It is probable that the events which have occurred will have the effect of depriving him of the influence he had acquired. But if not, there is little doubt that means can now be found of bringing such pressure to bear on him as will compel him to make amends for his misconduct.

13. With the Pathán tribes it has been deemed advisable to deal in a somewhat different manner for the reasons given in paragraphs 37 to 39 of Major Pollock's report, and the Appendix marked B; in the views expressed in which the Lieutenant Governor entirely concurs. As regards the Khán Kheyl section of the Hussunzais, some excuse may be found for them in the fact that they are closely connected by marriage with the Khán of Agrore, whose influence appears to have been incessantly exerted to prejudice them against us by false representations. Very much the same may be said in respect to the Akazais, as resulting from their immediate juxtaposition to Agrore; and in their case, on their making their entire submission, it has been deemed sufficient to deprive them of their independent tenure of Shahtút, within the Agrore boundary; which has heretofore afforded an asylum to the bad characters of Agrore. The representatives of all the Pathán tribes concerned presented themselves to the Lieutenant Governor at Oghí, and were addressed by him on the subject of their past bearing, and what is expected of them for the future; and they fully appreciate the altered relation in which they now stand towards us.

14. The Purárí Sayads and their immediate following of Chiggurzais have alone been exceptionally treated, several of their villages and much of their property having been destroyed on the 7th October by levies supported by some regular troops. After this, some of their representatives tendered their submission; but their most influential man, named Kudrat Shah, refused to come in, and fled; and as on the 12th a shot was fired at our rear guard, which was traced to one of his followers, his villages and property were, on the 14th, destroyed by a force detached for the purpose under Brigadier General Vaughan, with the full acquiescence, as it is stated, of the representatives of the tribes then in attendance. What may be the attitude taken up by this individual, on his return to his ruined villages, remains to be seen; but he will now be powerless for evil; and as in the case of Shál Khán of Takôt, it may be anticipated that he will ere long show a desire to make some amend.

15. The Lieutenant Governor having already stated that he entirely concurs in the views expressed by Major Pollock, he cannot well add to what that officer has said in the 36th and following paragraphs of his report, as to the general results of the late proceedings. He is most firmly convinced that the effect produced on the whole of Hazara, both within and beyond our own frontier, by witnessing the entry of a force quite irresistible, into whatever part of their territory it has been deemed necessary to reach; the vigor with which it has put down all opposition, and the skill, order, and moderation manifested throughout its operations, has been of the most salutary and lasting kind; and will lead to much more of friendly intercourse between us and the independent tribes than has hitherto existed.

16. He has now, too, moved into the Peshawar valley, and has thus had an opportunity of learning how profound and beneficial an effect has been produced by all that has occurred on the races of these parts and those beyond our border here. The punishment inflicted on the latter, when opposed to us at Ambela in 1863, has no doubt taught them a salutary lesson; the deterrent effects of which will be apparent if we should be again brought into conflict with them. But it may well be doubted whether even the effects of that campaign have been so entirely beneficial as the deliberate show of strength and resolution, combined with forbearance, which have throughout characterized the late campaign in Hazara.

17. The effect produced in Hazara itself has been proved by the entirely altered attitude of the Deshís, and the recusant Pathán tribes, immediately after our force had reached the Machai peak of the Black Mountain; their ready supply of hostages to accompany the force during the remaining operations; their entire assent to the destruction of the Purárí villages; the meekness with which the Swátís submitted to the march of our troops through their valleys, which at first made them exceedingly uneasy; the immediate payment of fine inflicted on a village of Nandihar, where our rear guard was fired on; and the willingness with which the representatives of all came into Abbottabad to present themselves to the Lieutenant Governor. We have now made really good roads into and through their valleys; we have obtained a thorough knowledge and good surveys of them, and of the entire country visited; and we have ascertained the important fact that most of the tribes are quite as amenable to blockade, as an effective means of coercion, should they again offend, as any tribe along our entire frontier.

18. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will have formed his own opinion, and communicated it to Government, in regard to the mode in which the military operations have been conducted by General Wilde. But the Lieutenant Governor deems it incumbent on him to express the admiration with which he has regarded those operations throughout. The completeness of the force and its equipments in all respects; the rare excellence of the Commissariat arrangements; the entire freedom from encumbrances with which the force marched when it had to advance; the skill with which the line of march was selected, all subsidiary arrangements made, and all requirements provided for; as well as the excellent spirit and cheerful endurance shown by all ranks, have been conspicuous throughout; while His Honor desires specially to record his acknowledgments for the cordial manner in which General Wilde, and all under him, have co-operated with the Civil authorities, and the sound and excellent advice which he has at all times rendered to the Commissioner on all points relating to which his great experience could prove useful.

19. From what has been said above, as well as from former reports, it will have been gathered that Major Pollock has at all times enjoyed the entire confidence and approval of the Lieutenant Governor, who considers him to have acted throughout the late negociations, not only with entire devotion to the public interests, but with great prudence and judgment, firmness and forbearance; while his proceedings have resulted in what His Honor considers to be entire success. He trusts that Major Pollock's zealous and earnest exertions will have equally secured the approval of the Supreme Government, and will be acknowledged by it in such terms as may be deemed suitable.

20. The Commissioner has been most ably and energetically supported, from the first outbreak to the close of the campaign, by Captain Ommanney, Deputy Commissioner, who has always been to the front where any work was to be done, and whose intimate acquaintance with Hazara and its populations has been of the greatest value. Lieutenant Wace, who chanced to be present in Hazara as Settlement Officer, has rendered most excellent service in various ways throughout, cheerfully and energetically performing whatever duties the Commissioner deemed it advisable from time to time to entrust to him. When a force was detached to occupy Darband, he was selected, with reference to his experience in dealing with frontier tribes, and matured judgment, to accompany it, and fulfilled the duty devolving on him in the most satisfactory manner. Major Pollock makes favorable mention also of the other Assistants employed under him.

21. The valuable services rendered to the force and to Government by Colonel Johnstone, Revenue Surveyor, have been noticed by Major Pollock in his 63rd paragraph, and will doubtless have been brought to the notice of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief by General Wilde. But as these services were lent from the Civil Department, the Lieutenant Governor deems it right to solicit for them the favorable recognition of the Supreme Government. He regards it as having been most fortunate that an officer so especially qualified in many ways for the post he has lately filled, as Surveyor in attendance on the force, was available on the spot. A very large amount of valuable information has been collected by him. And His Honor believes that no one could have fulfilled more zealously or efficiently than Colonel Johnstone has done the important and laborious duties recently entrusted to him.

22. The fact of the campaign having come to a close without our having been able either to punish and drive out the Hindustani fanatics, or to induce them to surrender and return to their homes in Hindustan, cannot but be regretted. The causes, however, which have rendered this impossible are fully explained in the Appendix marked C, and it is needless to add anything on the subject here, beyond remarking that their spirit appears to have been quite broken by the bearing towards them of their own co-religionists; that there is little or no prospect of their ever again being able to live with comfort or security amongst the frontier tribes; and that His Honor anticipates that the results of the late campaign will exercise a material influence towards inducing them to surrender themselves to us.

23. The mode in which it will now be necessary to deal with the Ex-Khan of Agrore will, as above stated, be separately reported on. But it may be well here to mention that, besides the clear demonstration afforded in various ways, by the course of events, of that individual's extreme perfidy, this has lately been acknowledged in the most circumstantial manner by members of his own family.

24. The Lieutenant Governor desires, before closing this report, to make favorable mention of the contingent so promptly lent by the Maharajah of Jummoo and Cashmere immediately after the occurrence of the outbreak. Whatever work was required of them from time to time, they have always cheerfully undertaken and efficiently performed. His Honor personally on the parade of troops, and subsequently in Durbar, expressed to the Commandant the favorable impression which had been conveyed to all by their proceedings throughout the late operations, and he has addressed to His Highness the Maharajah a letter of hearty acknowledgment for the important aid he has rendered in placing the services of this excellent body of men at our disposal.

Dated 31st October, 1868.

From—MAJOR F. R. POLLOCK, Commr. and Supdt., Peshawur Division,

To—The Secretary to the Government of the Punjab.

In my former reports on the subject, ending with my No. 68, dated 27th August, I have done my best to put before His Honor the circumstances leading to, and attending, the attack on the Oghí Thanah, and the subsequent outrages which extended over a fortnight, and were brought to a close by the successful operations, on 12th August, of the troops in the Agrore valley under Colonel Rothney's direction.

2. Your letter dated 12th September, giving cover to No. 996, dated 8th September, from Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department, conveyed sanction of the Supreme Government to a punitory expedition for the coercion of the tribes of the Black Mountain, and of those sections of the Independent Swátí tribes who had been actively concerned against the Government.

3. From commencement of August to that of October, during two whole months, every exertion was made to collect information as to the country we were about to act in, and the attitude and capabilities of the tribes who might probably be brought into collision with us; while in the Military Department, the most complete organization was aimed at, in view to our troops moving through a difficult hill country fully equipped and effective, and yet encumbered with a minimum of baggage, ammunition, and Commissariat animals.

4. While thus employed, and while troops for the expedition were being collected, many of them from distant stations, pains were taken to ascertain accurately the proximate cause of the hostile action taken by the tribes, to discriminate between those who had been temporarily led away and those who had by their acts and counsel proved themselves leaders in the outrage, and all concerned were invited to submit before punishment overtook them, or to wait on our officers to tender explanation, if they felt able to clear themselves of participation.

5. Appendix A is a copy of the proclamations issued to the tribes concerned, Cis and Trans Indus, so as to leave no room for doubt as to the aims and objects of the expedition.

6. Appendix B gives a resumé of our former connexion and dealing with the Pathán tribes of the Black Mountain. With the Cis-Indus Independent Swátí tribes, we have never previously come into collision, or had serious cause of complaint.

7. The further I extended my enquiries, the more evident and apparent it became that the Swátís were the chief offenders in the Agrore outrage, and in the more serious disturbance which followed so closely upon that outrage, when the deportation of the Khans had aroused the active sympathy of their supporters.

8. The Khan Kheyl section, however, of the Hussunzai tribe was closely concerned in Atta Muhammad Khán's disgrace, owing to the fact of his having formed an alliance with the daughter of the late Hassan Ali Khán, Khan Kheyl, Hussunzai, the man who, at the time of Colonel Mackeson's expedition, was the most influential person in the clan. The Akazais were also implicated. They had escaped unpunished in 1852, although the resistance offered to Colonel Napier's column was almost entirely from them. Their village of Shahtoot, though within our border, had remained independent, and they had an undue idea of their importance, and lying close to the Swátís of Agrore, Atta Muhammad Khan had gained an influence over them.

9. The Patháns were further and more seriously compromised by the fact of the attack on the Thanah having been committed by Purárí Sayads, and their Pathán cultivators, Chuggarzais and also by some Chuggarzais of the main clan.

10. This being the case, it was impossible to deal with the less warlike Swátís, and the Patháns actually concerned, without providing against the contingency of the latter being supported by the whole of the Isazai* Páthan tribe, and by the whole of the Chuggarzai tribe, Cis and Trans-Indus.

* Includes Hussunzai, Cis and Trans-Indus, Akazai, Mudda Khey, Trans-Indus.

11. Nor could we shut our eyes to the fact that, had the above tribes opposed us as a whole, their ranks would probably have been swelled by large bodies of other Trans-Indus tribes, more especially if the religious element had been successfully introduced, and the Akhoond of Swát had, as in 1863, issued his "firman" to all good Muhammadans to join in opposing the hated invaders.

12. I am the more anxious to lay stress on the fact that such formidable combinations as have been above indicated were not only possible, but quite probable, because it has so happened, and very mercifully so, that owing to the wise forethought of the Supreme Government, and of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, in sending into the field a more complete force than has ever previously been employed for a hill expedition, and also owing to the masterly disposition of that force by the Major General in Command of it, the aims and object of Government in its employment have been carried out at a comparatively small sacrifice of human life.

13. And this happy result which, to those acquainted with the circumstances, can only be considered as in the highest degree satisfactory, might, in the absence of full explanation, induce an impression that unnecessary means had been used to secure such results—an impression which would be most erroneous.

14. The operations of the Hazara Field Force from day to day, from 3rd to 20th instant, on which latter date the force re-entered British territory, have, I am aware, been fully detailed by General Wilde in his despatches to the Adjutant General of the Army, and it would be a work of supererogation for me to repeat the account.

15. I shall do well to confine myself to a description of the effects produced, and the objects gained by these operations.

16. It will be difficult for me to explain how slowly the tribes we were about to deal with accepted the fact that our long suffering Government was really bent on coercing the border, and calling them to account; and there seems no room to doubt but that the Khán of Agrore had continuously led the tribes to believe that nothing would induce the Government to sanction a punitory expedition.

17. When, however, our preparations, and the formal declaration of our intentions, altered their views, the nearer Swátís, those of Tikrí and Jundulug, waited on us for tendering submission, and begging for the substitution of a fine for the invasion and devastation of their country.

18. The Hussunzais, who had, as formerly reported, entered into friendly communication with the Tunawalli Chief, as far back as the 10th or 11th of August, and had consequently held aloof from the affair of the 12th idem, similarly sent in representatives with apologies for those of their tribe who had offended, and with the assurance of their willingness to abide by the terms of their engagement entered into with Colonel Coxe, at Darband, at the close of the Ambela campaign.

19. It was true that they had not acted against us as a tribe, and there was force in what they urged, that in August they actually prevented their Trans-Indus brethren, the Mudda Kheyls and others, from crossing to the Hazara bank, and joining in the attack on the Agrore detachment; that they had done this, I had ascertained reliably from other sources not connected with them.

20. Therefore, although the tribe was not, as it endeavored to make out, free from blame, I felt justified, looking to the importance of detaching them from the other tribes, in dealing leniently with them. They were directed, if sincere in their professions of friendship and submission, to tell off representatives to accompany the force through their country, and warned that, in the event of resistance being offered to our troops, they would be liable to the destruction of their villages and crops, and their representatives would be detained in custody.

21. Another significant proof of the overawing effect of the force assembling in Agrore was afforded by the gradual return into British territory of the families and relations of the deported Khans—Atta Muhammad and Alladad Khán. The adjacent hills no longer afforded them safe asylum, and they preferred surrendering themselves to seeking shelter Trans-Indus.

22. We had still to deal, however, with the large Chuggarzai tribe (Pathans), Akazai (Pathans) with Deshí and Tahkote Swátís, the Purárí Sayads and their followers, and not improbably with the Hindustance fanatics, and large bodies of Trans-Indus Pathans.

23. General Wilde's operations of the 3rd instant were conducted in such strength, and with such success, that no serious resistance was attempted, and it became clear, from the non-appearance of the Tikrís and Nandiharis on that day, that they would not trust themselves in collision with us.

24. As the night of the 3rd closed in, the enemy, composed of Akazais, Chuggarzais, Sayads, Goojars, &c., collected around the position "Ab-Munna-ka-Dunna," and until morning persevered in making sudden attacks, showing considerable spirit and determination.

25. On the 4th, our forward movement, and capture of their breastwork under cover of a very effective Artillery fire, seemed to damp their ardour; they became acquainted for the first time with the effects of Artillery, and learnt that we could make their positions untenable without exposing ourselves to their fire. By evening, we held the spur from Khoondgullee to Chittabut, on the main ridge of the mountain, and no such attack as that of the previous night was attempted.

26. Simultaneously with this advance, the Hazara levies moved up the Burches spur, with orders not to attempt to reach the crest till they saw Chittabut in our possession. Shahzada Ibrahim, Sudozai, was in command of them, and carried out his instructions very creditably. Near the main ridge a faint resistance was offered by a few of the enemy, who caused them a loss of five wounded, two of whom have since died. By night-fall, they joined the camp of the 1st Brigade, and had assigned to them the defence of a position.

27. On the 5th, the Troops under Brigadier General Bright occupied the Machai peak, and in spite of the admirable cover which the difficult nature of the ascent afforded to the enemy, the loss on our side was nominal, compared to what we had reason to expect.

28. At Machai, we had reached an elevation of 10,200 feet. On the highest point of the range here, for the first time, we commanded a view of the Indus scenery at the foot of the western spur of the range. On the left bank, about 10 miles from us, north and east, lay the Chuggarzai village of Joodbor, on the opposite bank, Behar, also belonging to the Chuggarzais. In the latter village a sentry of the fanatics, and one or two tents could be seen, and as these two villages contained the bulk of the fanatics, some 600 or 700 strong, hopes were entertained that we might bring them into our programme, and thus rid the Government and the neighbourhood of this nest of hornets.

29. For the reasons which prevented the fulfilment of these expectations, I refer you to Appendix C, which gives a sketch of the colony from 1863 to the present time, when, by a singular chance, our proceedings against the Cis-Indus tribes was coincident with the expulsion by the Muhammadans of the Wahabi fanatics from their Trans-Indus settlement. The story of their expulsion is too long to be introduced into the body of my report, and I have been much perplexed in my recent attempts to report on them; it was like trying to write out a report upon a shifting sand-bank; their movements and plans have for weeks past been ever changing under the orders of the spiritual Head, or Akhoond of Swát. Fifty of their number have been killed, and from 20 to 30 wounded, and after ordering their expulsion or extermination, he only stayed his hand against them at the last moment, when his fears were aroused lest we should invade his country, when their arms would be of material assistance to him.

30. Called upon by the tribes opposed to us to lead their forces, they were too dispirited to respond, and the submission of Jirgahs which followed upon our occupation of Machai was the signal for the fanatics to return to the right bank.

31. On the 6th, the Deshí Jirgah (Independent Swátís) came into our camp with a copy of my proclamation in their hand, submitted to the terms already given to their Tikrí and Nandihar brethren, and by their statement rather confirmed the truth of the excuses they had made when formerly called upon to come in; their country being so close to that of the Patháns, they dared not act in opposition to their wishes till we had shown ourselves in a commanding position in the Pathán country.

32. On the 7th instant, as the Patháns offered no resistance, and as it was known that their remaining Jirgahs were coming in, troops were not sent to destroy their villages; as on the other hand the Purárí Sayads were still apparently hostile, and showed no signs of submission, the levies were employed, under protection of some regular troops, moving down the Bilunkot spur; they burnt several villages of Saida and Kotwal, with their surrounding hamlets, without opposition.

33. Similar operations were to have been carried out on the 8th by a regular column and levies, acting down the main spur, but we stayed our hands on the representation of the Jirgahs in camp that the Sayads had determined to submit.

34. On the 8th and 9th the Sayads, Chuggarzai and Akazai headmen, waited on us, leaving no tribe unpresented, but the Takôt section of the Swátís, and the Allaiwals, who, as a tribe, had held aloof from the attack on Agrore.

35. On the 10th, assembling the Jirgahs, I accepted their submission, and explained to the Akazais, who, as in the expedition in 1852, had taken a leading part against us, that the village of Shahtoot, on an eastern spur of the range, and within the British border, would in future be held by them as British subjects, and assessed; hitherto, they had been allowed, as in the time of the Sikhs, to hold this rent-free, and as an independent village, in return for which they had been uniformly insolent in their tone towards us, and had for years past readily afforded an asylum to bad characters of the Hazara district. I required their Jirgah, with the others, to accompany our force in token of submission, and as hostages for their good behaviour during our march through their country to the Agrore valley, viâ the Independent Swátí tracts of Tikrí and Nandihar.

36. To persons unacquainted with the politics of the border, and the result of former expeditions, it might well appear but reasonable that more stringent terms should be imposed; and although I am perfectly satisfied that, in acting as I did, I best served the interests of Government, which had entrusted to me a heavy and responsible task, and although I am aware that my proceedings met with the full approbation of His Honor the Lieutenant Governor, who has from the commencement of our Hazara disturbance so generously and cordially afforded us his support, there are reasons why I should, even at the risk of being tedious, explain proceedings which, to those unacquainted with the circumstances, might seem to have been characterized by undue leniency.

37. In dealing with the Pathán tribes of the border, on an occasion like the present, our object should be rather to effect what is called in oriental phraseology "lifting up their purdahs" than to kill numbers of them, or unceremoniously to impose fines, or to unroof or burn villages, or destroy crops; such punishments, cruel even when rightly directed, fall with the greatest severity on the least guilty members of an offending tribe, and our best officers, civil and military, have always held similar [illegible] a small force.

38. As regards this particular expedition, I am satisfied that the aims and objects of Government had been fully attained, when our troops had at a slight sacrifice of human life established themselves on the most commanding position in the enemy's country, and that enemy had submitted to us.

39. Assuming the question to be put, could we by pursuing a different course to that adopted have secured better results? I unhesitatingly reply in the negative; the tribes are proud, poor, and scattered over a rugged and unproductive country; to have demanded from the heads of such a people, when tendering their submission, fines or compensation, or to surrender, to undergo punishment, any of their leaders, would have been to dismiss them to their homes dispirited but desperate men; and had we used our troops in acting against them along the difficult western spurs running down to the Indus, they would have given us no chance of meeting them on equal terms, and the affair woud have degenerated into a guerilla warfare, in a country where our troops would in a measure have lost their superiority by reason of their ignorance of locality, and inability to act in close order.

In such operations, we should have lost many valuable lives; at best we should have secured no better results than we have actually secured; and at worst it is not too much to say that we might have been in a vastly inferior position, while in any case the expenses of the expedition must have been enormously increased.

40. To resume the narrative. On the 11th and 12th, our troops were moved from the Pathán country, and portions of them were told off to preserve our communications, so long as the remainder of the force was employed in the Independent Swátí country.

41. On the 12th, as our rear guard approached our camping ground at Munna-ka-Dunna, it was fired at, and in the skirmish which ensued, we inflicted some loss on the assailants.

42. This breach of faith being traced to the Sayads, and no redress having been given during the 13th, on the 14th, with the concurrence of the Jirgahs, the chief Sayad village of Gurhee was burnt by a column detached for the purpose; the whole force that evening encamped at Cheerung, on the ridge of the Tikrí valley.

43. On the 15th, we moved on to Tikrí to the village of that name. We were employed on the following day making a road over the Shahburn spur, which divides Tikrí from Nandihar.

44. On the 17th, we moved forward to Nandihar, and were struck with the richness of the country, the abundance of water for irrigation, and the extent of cultivation high up on the ranges dividing Nandihar from Allai.

45. In Tikrí, we at first experienced some little difficulty in re-assuring the people, but as our march through it had been attended by no act of oppression or spoliation, the Nandiharis remained quietly in their villages, and firewood, forage, &c., were freely brought into camp.

46. While at Maidan, we had to decide the question whether from this point the Takôt Swátis, who still remained recusant, should be coerced.

47. Up to this date the representatives of the Swátí Jirgahs led us to believe that the Takotís would put in an appearance, but their distance from us, and the facility with which they could cross the Indus, on the bank of which their principal village is situated, prevented their doing so.

48. On the 18th, the approach to their country was reconnoitred as far as Dubrai, the Deputy Commissioner, Captain Ommanney, accompanying the party. At Paimal, a village immediately below the Gullee, resides Hubeeb ol, a holy man of great local influence. On the arrival of the party, a nons was sent to him, and he shortly after arrived, accompanied by the of the village, and of the Takôtí village of Pomung.

Later in the same day, reliable information was received that Shál he leading spirits in Takôt, had fled across the Indus.

50. It would have been possible for a force to move down to Takôt and destroy it, but the country was so difficult that such a project could not have been safely carried out as a military raid, and to have moved to Takôt in force with guns and Commissariat would have occupied many days, and cost much money for an inadequate object.

51. On the 19th, we moved to Pugora, at the head of the Nandihar valley, and a shot having been fired from the hill side after dark, as the rear regiment approached camp, the Mulliks of the neighbouring villages were arrested, and taken on with us, and subsequently released at Oghí on payment of a fine of Rs. 500 as a punishment for the outrage.

52. On the 20th the whole force re-entered British territory, crossing a low range into the Konsh valley, a beautiful open plateau, about 6,000 feet above the sea.

53. I reached Abbottabad the same evening to meet His Honor the Lieutenant Governor. His Honor entered Agrore on Saturday, the 24th instant, holding a Durbar on the afternoon of that day; conferred the title of Nawab on the gallant young Tunawullee Khan, receiving at the same time the Khans of Upper Hazara, the heads of levies, Government officials, &c.

Every one who had earned approbation by his conduct during the last three months received a suitable acknowledgment.

54. Proceedings were closed by the reception of the seven Jirgahs or councils of elders. These presented nuzzurs, which were touched, but not retained.

55. On the following day, I dismissed these men to their homes, releasing their prisoners, expressing a hope that in future years, when the Commissioner may visit Agrore, they would wait on him, and might be received on more friendly terms.

56. Being anxious to submit my report as early as possible, and being aware that General Wilde's despatches are being, or have been submitted, I will not detain this letter, although the following points have still to be carefully dealt with:—

(1). Future status of the Nawab of Amb; nature and extent of the rewards to be bestowed on him in addition to his title.

(2). Re-settlement of Agrore.

(3). Conduct of officials and levies, with propositions for pensions or compensation to certain of these.

(4). Course to be followed with regard to the Ex-Jagirdar of Agrore, Atta Muhammad Khán.

These may all well form the subjects of future and separate letters, the preparation of which shall receive my earliest attention.

57. I cannot, however, conclude without recording my sense of gratitude, that I have been associated with Major General Wilde, as the Military Head of the Hazara Field Force. I am indebted to him in a thousand ways for the consideration he displayed at all times, and the valuable advice his frontier experience enabled him to give me. It would be difficult for me to exaggerate the amount of time and trouble saved to both of us by the cordial understanding that existed throughout between us. Our consultations were entirely verbal and demi-official, and I venture to offer my tribute of praise to the admirable management which enabled him at so small a loss to accomplish such excellent results. Those only who are acquainted with the peculiar difficulties attendant on the movement of regular troops, through such a tract of country as the Black Mountain, can properly appreciate the amount of forethought, experience, and special aptitude brought to bear on the matter in hand.

58. I have in former reports and demi-official notes written favorably of Captain Ommanney's exertions during the last three months, and I repeat here that he has shown, throughout the late disturbances, great firmness, self-devotion, and zeal, and the qualities most required to fit an officer for the charge of a frontier district.

59. Before General Wilde's force advanced up the Black Mountain, it was thought desirable to place a small force* at Darband, on the river Indus, opposite to the Amb territory (Trans-Indus). The position at Darband, the extreme north-west corner of the Hazara district, at once protects the Amb town and territory Trans-Indus, and threatens the Southern Hussunzais, Mudda Kheyls, and Amazais, the territory of all these tribes infringing on it.

* 7 Companies, Her Majesty's 38th Foot.
31st Regiment, Punjab Native Infantry.
1 Squadron and Head Quarters 9th Bengal Cavalry.

60. The Mudda Kheyls and Amazais took advantage of the absence at Agrore of the Nawab of Amb and his levies to attack two of his Trans-Indus villages, Sittana and Guner. It was felt that there was good reason for apprehending further disturbances in this direction unless a force was detached to Darband, and in doing this, Government had in view to deter any of the Trans-Indus tribes from crossing over and assisting those opposed to us. The measure was in every way successful. The Mudda Kheyls altered their tone on the arrival of troops at Darband, and the civil officer (Lieutenant Wace), who accompanied the column, was able to report in a few days that these tribes were apparently willing to settle reasonably their dispute with the Amb Chief.

61. The Amazais have sent in a Jirgah, and the Mudda Kheyl Jirgah is also expected. I hope to be able to send you in a few days a short report showing the way in which this matter has been disposed of. I have requested General Wilde to permit the Darband column to remain at that place till our negociations the[illegible] closed.

62. Lieutenant Wace has acted with much discretion at Darband, and before proceeding there, had been of great use to us in many ways, especially as regards the collection of Commissariat supplies. As also had the Settlement Extra Assistant Commissioner Mirza Azim Beg. I was further indebted to the last named official for the carrying on of the judicial duties of the Hurreepore Pergunnah, the Extra Assistant Commissioner and Tahsildar, who are ordinarily stationed there, being unavoidably called away for the time to the northern half of the district.

63. I desire also to note the invaluable assistance afforded to the expedition by Colonel H. E. Johnstone, of the Revenue Survey, and his establishment; the interruption of their ordinary work by the disturbances led to their employment in Agrore, and to our obtaining as excellent a map of the country, in which we were about to act, as could possibly be compiled from Native information. Colonel Johnstone's services have, I am aware, been appreciated and noticed by General Wilde, but it is only right that I should add my acknowledgments.

He had been employed in several expeditions of a similar kind, and the experience thereby gained peculiarly qualified him for his late position. I am indebted to him for the map which accompanies this report, and for Appendix D, which is a topographical memorandum of the countries through which we passed.

64. Appendix E contains notes kindly furnished by Mr. B. Ribbentrop of the Forest Department.

65. Captain Hastings, Assistant Commissioner, accompanied the 1st Brigade during our advance, and he and Lieutenant Lang, Assistant Commissioner in charge of Levies, and Lieutenant the Hon'ble C. Napier, my Personal Assistant, all deserve my thanks. The last mentioned has at all times rendered most useful and willing assistance.

66. In conclusion, I would record my high opinion of the valuable services rendered to the expedition by the troops of His Highness the Maharajah of Cashmere, which will doubtless be acknowledged by Government.

General Dhurm Sing, the Commander, and his subordinates on all occasions displayed a desire to comply promptly with all my requisitions.

By the forethought of the local Government, a strong body of auxiliary Police, nearly 300 in number, under command of Lieutenant Jones and Mr. Hatchell, were placed at our disposal. They were very useful, and performed efficiently the duties required of them.

APPENDIX A.

Translation of Proclamations addressed to Cis and Trans-Indus Tribes.

To Trans-Indus Tribes generally.

Whereas the tribes bordering on British territory, and accustomed to move freely to and fro between it and their own country, are well acquainted with our customs and ways; that Government oppresses no one, unless he is guilty of committing an outrage—either of his own folly or incited by some designing person. But those who live further off from the British border, and hold less communication with us, hear nothing but what is told them by designing persons. Therefore this notice is issued for the information of those who are in ignorance or have been misinformed. That certain independent tribes residing on this (Hazara) bank of the Indus, incited by Atta Muhammad Khan and Alladad Khan, Jagirdars of Agrore, which is situated within the British border, attacked the Thana of Oghí in Agrore. These tribes had, in no respect, been interfered with or oppressed, but after attacking the Thana, they further offended by entering our territory with arms and flags and burning sundry villages—rendering imperative their punishment. Those who were not concerned in the above acts, and continue to hold aloof, should rest quite assured and free from apprehension. Government has no concern with them, nor will it cross the Indus to coerce them. Government calls to account and punishes only those who offend it.

F. R. Block,
Commissioner.

To Cis-Indus Tribes.

Chuggarzais, Akazais, Deshís and Takôtí, residing on this (Hazara) bank of Indus—

Be it known to you—

Prior to this, on sundry occasions you have interfered with Agrore affairs, and now you have gratuitously attacked the Oghí Thana. Government, which is a long-suffering one, can bear with you no further, and calls you to account for the above acts.

It will be better for you to put in an appearance and answer to the above charge, or to do so when the Government forces enter your territory. If you oppose the Government troops, whatever loss follows is on your own head. Government has no desire to take your lives and destroy your property—in such affairs many innocent persons suffer in life and property—you are hereby required to wait on us here or when the force advances, to receive the orders of Government.

F. R. POLLOCK,
Commissioner.

N. B.—The above were written in Persian on one side of the paper, and on reverse side in Pushtu, written in the Arabic character, which is best understood by the village Moollahs across the border.

APPENDIX B.

As will be seen from the map furnished by Colonel Johnstone, Revenue Surveyor, the lower or southern part of the Black Mountain is inhabited by the Hussunzais, next to them come the Akazais, the smallest, but bravest section of the tribe,* and next come the Chuggarzais. An excellent and full account of all the Pathán tribes situated on the western frontier of Hazara, and on opposite (right) bank of Indus, is given by the late Major Adams in his No. 469½, dated 28th July, 1862, to Commissioner of Peshawur, which was published in the Ambeyla Blue Book (pp. 194-5-6-7-8-9 and 200) as an appendix. This, a very exhaustive and interesting document, was written primarily as a report on the conduct of the Judoon tribe (Trans-Indus) in connection with the kidnapping of Kuthrees, of the Hazara district, by Hindustani fanatics or refugee criminals from British districts, who had taken shelter with them, but it also extends to a general account of the fanatics and surrounding tribes, and includes suggestions as to the measures which should be adopted in dealing with these when troublesome.

* Isazai composed of Hussunzai, Cis and Trans-Indus, Akazai, Cis-Indus, Mudda Kheyl, Trans-Indus.

2. With the Chuggarzais, who are numerically the most important tribe of the Black Mountain, we have had up to the present time literally no dealings as a tribe whatever, except in 1863, when they joined the ranks of the Akhoond before Ambeyla, but retired after suffering severely on the single occasion in which they shared in an attack on our troops. They are agriculturists and traders, and although we have recently had occasion to call them to account, we know now that the bulk of the tribe was innocent, and not cognizant of the attack on the Agrore Thana, and that, as a tribe, they took no part in the fighting that occurred in Agrore subsequent to 30th July (date of Thana attack), and prior to the expedition.

Certain families of the tribe have become associated with the Pírárí Sayads as cultivators or holders of mortgaged land, and it was these, with the other cultivators and supporters of the Sayads, who were induced by the Jagirdars of Agrore to attack the Thana. The events of the past three months have brought nothing but loss of life, money, and reputation to the tribe, and its future good behaviour may be safely counted on with reference to its own interests, and irrespective of its engagement never again to offend us.

3. The Hussunzais offended as far back as 1851 by murdering Messrs. Carne and Tapp of the Salt Department. A short account of the outrage and of the expedition which it led to, is given in the Frontier Tribe Report submitted by Mr. (now Sir R.) Temple, Secretary to Government, Punjab, on 31st January 1856, paras. 7 to 11 inclusive.

The tribe was by no means excused or acquitted by the fact that these murders were believed to have been committed at the instigation of Bostan Khan, minister of the Tunawul Khan (or Khan of Amb) Jehandad Khan.

4. A reference to the Ambeyla Blue Book will show (page 43, para. 23 of letter from Secretary to Punjab Government, to Foreign Secretary) that an expedition against the Hussunzai tribe formed part of the Ambeyla programme, owing to misconduct reported by Deputy Commissioner, Hazara, in his letters of 31st August 1863, to Commissioner (see page 33 of Blue Book), and of following day (see page 37 of idem). Also see page 52 of same, giving Deputy Commissioner's letter of 2nd September 1863, and No. 8-47, dated 20th January 1864 (page 184, Blue Book).

Subsequently the Hussunzais waited on Colonel Coxe, Deputy Commissioner at Darband, begged pardon and entered into engagements, which they adhered to pretty well, till a section of them was seduced into misconduct by Atta Muhammad Khan's persistent misrepresentations.

It may be noted incidentally here, that the evil influence of Atta Muhammad Khan over the Hussunzais is, in several places, referred to in the papers I have quoted above.

5. The Akazais also appear to have been chiefly incited to break with us by the insidious counsel of Atta Muhammad Khan, who represented that the location of a Thana at Agrore was but the forerunner of the independent village Shahtoot (referred to in my report) being annexed and assessed. Shahtoot will now be held by them as British subjects, being assessed lightly like all the Agrore villages; and the principal hold we have over this tribe is two-fold:—1*st,* the power to take from them entirely Shahtoot which has some productive lands; 2*nd,* the knowledge we have gained of the valuable and very accessible rice and wheat, and other crops reared by them in the Tikrí valley; they hold one or two entire villages there, and shares in several others, all acquired by Pathán encroachment on the unwarlike Swátis.

F. R. POLLOCK,
Commissioner.

APPENDIX C.

The colony of Hindustanis of the Wahabi persuasion, which has been for years settled among the independent Pathán tribes on our north-west frontier, was founded by Syud Ahmed of Bareilly about the year 1824. A short history of the colony, and an account of our relations with the fanatics up to the end of 1863, will be found in the report of the Secretary to Government, Punjab, on the expedition undertaken against them in that year. After their expulsion from Mulkah, the greater number of the fanatics, led by the Moulvi Abdoollah, retired into the Chuggarzai country, north of Mahabun, and north of the Burrundoo river; a few, including Mahomed Isak and Mahomed Yakoob, two of their best leaders, returned to and remained at Mulkah with Mobaruk Shah, son of the Syud Akbur, who succeeded Syud Ahmed, and was elected king of Swát—dying in 1856-57. After a time the fanatics obtained from the Chuggarzais grants of the villages of Tangora and Buttora, where they made permanent settlement and remained undisturbed up to commencement of the present year. Their position was however by no means comfortable. The people amongst whom they dwelt made them pay dearly for the protection afforded them, and for the supplies they received; it was only by the greatest efforts that their agents in Hindustan were enabled to forward to them sufficient money for their support. They were moreover frequently threatened with expulsion by their hosts, who forcibly prevented the completion of two towers which the Moulvi Abdoollah had commenced to erect in Buttora. The Akhoond also looked upon them with no friendly eye; their Wahabi inclinations are abhorrent to him, and their position in the country was a standing menace, for their leaders maintained their position only by intrigue and were ready tools in the hands of the rival faction in Boneyr and elsewhere, followers of the Kotah Mullah. The reports received during the last five years show that the Akhoond and the Chief Moulvi were at constant feud, the former denouncing the latter as a Wahabi and unbeliever, and the Moulvi in turn accusing the Akhoond of having deserted them, and betrayed the cause of Islam by making peace with the infidels and allowing them to destroy Mulkah.

Political Department No. 51, dated 1st February 1868, published in Ambeyla Blue Book, page 125.

It is not surprising that, with this constant pressure on them, both at home and abroad, the community was several times on the point of dissolution. During the autumn of 1866, Mahomed Isak and Mahomed Yakoob made several attempts to open communication with Colonel Becher, through the instrumentality of Syud Mahmud (formerly in our service); their letters were received, and messages sent to them, but their plans were entirely frustrated by the vigilance of the Moulvi Abdoollah, who appears to have gained an entire ascendancy over all the other leaders. Matters remained thus until the beginning of 1868, the fanatics being too much engaged with their own quarrels and intrigues to annoy us or continue the system of highway robbery in our territories, which had first led to the recommendation by the Punjab Government of punitory expeditions in 1858 and 1863. In February 1868, news was received that the fighting men of the Hindustanis, numbering 400 or 500, had moved from Tangora and Buttora to Bazkutta in Boneyr, on the invitation of Asseem Khan of Bazkutta, an opponent of the Akhoond and firm supporter of his rival the Kotah Mullah. Asseem Khan offered to give the Hindustanis houses and land in his village if they would bring over their families and settle there permanently; his offer was accepted, and the fanatics abandoned Tungora and Buttora, a few only remaining at Mulkah. Nothing more was heard of them until the 18th of April, when the arrival of Feroze Shah at Bazkutta was reported by Asseem Khan himself, who wrote to the Commissioner of Peshawar to make his excuses for harbouring men whom he knew to be mortal enemies of the British Government.

Feroze Shah had arrived some months before at Thanah, the residence of the Akhoond, in great poverty and with only four attendants; he was well received and reported to be in high favor until the evil news of the arrival in Boneyr of his countrymen reached the Akhoond.

This movement of the fanatics into Boneyr was fatal to them; at a distance they might have been tolerated, and in time possibly have regained their prestige. The Akhoond lost no time in exerting all his influence to get rid of what he well knew would be a fruitful source of trouble to him. By skilful management he was enabled to conciliate and bring over all the Boneyr tribes of the opposite faction—Asseem Khan, Zeidoollah Khan, Nawab Khan, and a few other chiefs alone holding aloof. On the 25th May, at a large meeting of all the Boneyr tribes convened by the "Meerjee," the favorite minister of the Akhoond, it was determined that the Hindustanis should be expelled from Boneyr, their presence being displeasing to the Akhoond and contrary to the terms of the treaty made with the British Government. In consequence of this resolve, the fanatics, to the number of about 700 fighting-men, accompanied by Feroze Shah and Asseem Khan, made a precipitate retreat to Mulkah, where they commenced to re-build their houses, and made arrangements with the Amazai for supplies. In the mean time the Moulvi Abdoollah in person visited the Akhoond and found means to turn away his anger, for the Meerjee was recalled and permission given to the Hindustanis to resettle in Boneyr; the greater portion of them returned to Bazkutta, but had not been there very long before the intrigues of their leaders again brought them into trouble. The Moulvi Abdoollah was induced to join a league that had been formed by Asseem Khan and other Boneyr chiefs, together with the Amazais and Mokurrub Khan, Ex-Chief of the Khoodo Kheyls, to oppose the influence of the Akhoond and obtain for Mokurrub Khan recovery of his former possessions, and re-instatement at Punjtar. Mokurrub Khan, who after his expulsion from the Totullye villages, and the destruction of Punjtar and Mungul Thanah by our troops, had come in to the Commissioner of Peshawar, and been allowed to reside in British territory, was the prime mover in this plot, by which he sought to regain his former position. His money cemented the various alliances and purchased the neutrality of some of the Boneyr chiefs. On the 2nd of August Zeidullah Khan (Boneyr) committed the first overt act of hostility, by seizing a number of Swát traders passing through his lands. The Akhoond immediately mustered his followers and directed the Boneyr tribes to break up the league by expelling the Hindustanis and putting to death the refractory chiefs. In pursuance of the orders, the Esazais and Salarzai, Boneyrwals, attacked and killed Zeidullah Khan in his house. On the 12th, they arrived, together with the Akhoond's followers, before Bazkutta, and sent a message to the chief Moulvi giving him one day to remove all his followers, women and children. The fanatics at first thought of resistance, and exchanged a few shots with the Salarzais, but were induced by Asseem Khan to give in and commence preparations for a retreat. The next day the whole body evacuated Bazkutta, the women and children being sent on a-head and the rear brought up by a guard of 50 or 60 men armed with rifles. For the first few miles all went well, the Boneyr men being occupied in plundering and burning the deserted settlement; but as the fugitives neared the pass between Bazkutta and Buttora, they saw the hills on both sides held by the Akhoond's followers. The mass of the fugitives, including the Moulvi Abdoollah, Asseem Khan, and the Boneyr chiefs, pushed on through the pass and made their escape with slight loss, but the rear guard was cut off, and after a gallant stand, entirely destroyed. From Buttora, the fugitives fled to Gullima Boree in Chuggarzai. Here they obtained a short respite, and even conceived hopes of being able to establish themselves permanently, being promised support in the event of an attack by the Amazais and Juni Kheyl section of Chuggarzais.

The power of the Akhoond, increased by his complete triumph over the rival faction in Boneyr, was however too great for them. The Chuggarzais obeyed his order to expel the fanatics, who continued their flight through Tangora to Dihar on the banks of the Indus, where they arrived about the 18th of September, with some 20 or 30 wounded men. Later accounts of them are very conflicting; but it is certain that the chief Moulvi, with some hundreds of followers, came over to Joodbar, and that many of them remained there till the British force arrived on the crest of the Black Mountain. The fanatics were welcomed and assisted by the Peerzada, son of the late Hajee of Kunhar, by the son of Baj Khan of Kabilgraen, Akhoon Kheyl, and by the Kahil Mian, and the Sayads of Bihar. Through their instrumentality they obtained the grant of a hamlet in Joodbar, and were enabled to purchase several "Jalahs" or rafts, thus getting the command of the river and making themselves independent of the extortionate Pathán ferrymen. Whilst at Joodbar, the Moulvi received letters (it is said) from Ghuffar Khan of Tikrí, who offered to give the whole body of fugitives an asylum in his fort and land in the Tikrí valley, and from the Ullai Jirgah and chief of Takôt, who promised to accompany the Peerzada to Joodbar to hold a big council and discuss measures of resistance against the British. Mobaruk Shah was summoned by him; and the war party, Cis-Indus, was daily increasing. It seems probable that a month later the force under General Wilde would have found a powerful coalition and some organised plan of defence, but our rapid approach disconcerting them, the fanatics hastily re-crossed the river, deserting their Chuggarzai hosts, and thereby departing from their profession as soldiers of the faith, and destroying the last remnant of their former "prestige," already injured by the treatment they had met with at the hand of the Akhoond and his disciples. The main body of them is now at Pulosa, a village of the Trans-Indus Hussunzais, who have according to latest advices refused to allow them a permanent settlement. For the sake of religion they may be fed for a time, but the country is too poor to support them long, and they must soon, I believe, either make terms with the British Government, or break up and scatter themselves through the Mahomedan countries to the north of Swát and the Black Mountain, in which case their power for evil will be almost entirely removed, for the leaders will have lost the source of their importance, and the followers the guiding spirit that kept them together and made them formidable. When the Chuggarzai Jirgah waited on me at Machai, they voluntarily commenced their story by declaring their determinations not to give shelter to the fanatics.

As the name of Feroze Shah (Shah Zadah) has been introduced into this memorandum, I beg to remind you that, as reported in a recent Cabul Diary, the Shah Zadah, finding his position in Swát and Boneyr irksome or untenable, retired to Cabul, arriving just as Ameer Shere Ali regained his capital. The Ameer received him politely and gave him liberal travelling expense, but firmly denied an asylum to a known enemy of the British Government, and he is said to have left for Beloochistan.

F. R. Pollock,
Commissioner.

APPENDIX D.

Memorandum by Lieutenant-Colonel H. C. Johnstone, Revenue Surveyor, North-West Frontier, on the tracts of country visited or seen by the Hazara Field Force, under Major General Wilde, C. B. & C. S. I., in 1868.

Base of operations.

1. The valley of Agrore was the base of the operations of the Hazara Field Force. Here the troops assembled, and the munitions of war were collected.

People and countries to be dealt with.

2. The people and countries to be dealt with were as follow:—

Puthans.

The Puthán tribes inhabit the western slopes of the Black Mountain. It lies to the west of Agrore, but runs away north some 15 miles beyond. It commences on the edge of the Buruddur plain to the south, and reaches the Indus a little to the west of Takôt. The total length, as the crow flies, is about 25 miles.

Sayads and Deshís.

The Sayads and Deshís (Swátís) on the eastern slopes of the Black Mountain, beginning on the British boundary to the north of Agrore, and ending near Takôt.

Tikrí.

The valley of Tikrí, which lies to the north of Agrore, and is divided from it by the Kiarkote ridge and the Kubbul mountain; it is peopled by Swátís.

Nandihar.

The valley of Nandihar to the north and north-east of Tikrí, divided from it by the Shubora range. To the north of Nandihar runs the Chaila range, and divides it from Ullahi. The inhabitants are Swátís.

Black Mountain.

Punjeer Gully.

3. A short way up the most southern spur of the Black Mountain is the Amb out-post of Chumaeree as a guard against the Hussunzais. A path practicable for troops runs up this spur to Punjeer Gully. (It may be as well to say here that by "practicable" for troops is meant for a force equipped with mule carriage only; such roads might require occasional repairing, but this could be done easily by the Pioneers or Sappers which always accompany a force). Mackeson's column in 1852 ascended by this route. The Gully is a strategic position of importance, as it commands the Hussunzai country. From this Gully is a practicable ascent to Akhoon-baba-ka-choora, where the crest of the main range is reached. This was the point crowned by Napier's Brigade in 1852, and is the key of this part of the mountain. This portion of the hill is well wooded, and water is found on both sides, about a quarter of a mile down and less; of course if wanted in large quantities for an army it must be searched for. There are numerous small springs all about which are never required or used by the people. Forage is abundant. This peak dominates the Khan Kheyls and Turla Hussunzais. There are two practicable ascents to it from the Sherghur and Agrore sides by the Chutta and Sumbulboot spurs, which meet near the top. From the peak a practicable spur runs down to the Indus, having Aboo of the Hussunzais on an elevated plateau at its end; it divides the two tribes above mentioned from the Akazais. Its possession would most thoroughly hem them in. The distance from Buruddur to Akhoon-baba-ka-choora is 12 miles; down from it to Aboo, 3 miles; to Oghí by Sumbulboot spur, 6 miles; and to Sherghur by the Chutta spur, 8 miles.

Akhoon-baba-ka-choora.

Chutta and Sumbulboot spurs.

Chittabut.

4. From Akhoon-baba-ka-choora, along the crest, Chittabut is reached, about 4 miles; a practicable path runs through forests and over grassy glades. From Chittabut strikes off the comparatively easy Koongully spur, up which the ascent of the Black Mountain was made by the Hazara Field Force. From Chittabut to the village of Dilboree, at the foot of the Koongully spur, is 6½ miles.

Dodha and Máchai.

5. From Chittabut, along the crest, the path is practicable over Dodha to the Machai peak, 10,200 feet above sea level, and the highest point of the mountain, distance 3½ miles. From Akhoon-baba to Machai on the west are the Akazai; a practicable spur runs from Machai to the Indus, dividing the Akazai from the Chuggarzais on the north.

Dunda peak.

6. About 2½ miles beyond Machai is the Dunda peak. From it runs a rather difficult spur to the Indus, near the village of Joodbai, where some of the Hindustani fanatics crossed during the late operations. Their encampment was at Bihar, on the other side of the river. Joodbai is about 7 miles from the crest, as the crow flies, which means 14 by the path. These villages and the tents of the fanatics were clearly seen from Machai. From Dunda to the east runs a practicable spur ending in two points at Trund and Gidghoree. Between this spur and the Koongully are the Purárí Sayads. The distance from Dunda to Trund and Gidghoree is about equal, and about 6 miles.

Water.

7. As at Akhoon-baba-ka-choora, water is found in numerous springs all along the slopes and near the crest; the hill sides are covered with fields of Indian corn, affording in the proper season large supplies of forage. The range is well wooded on both sides.

Mulka.

Ambeyla pass.

8. From Machai the view is grand. The panorama begins with the Gundghur and the Mahabun Mountains, the Indus running between, and Attock seen far off in the distance through the opening. In the cup of the Mahabun on its north nestles the old Hindustani settlement of Mulka, destroyed in 1863. Prominent is the Ambeyla pass with the lofty peak of Guroo to its west; the crag picket and conical hill—both points of painful though glorious interest in connection with the Ambeyla expedition—stand out clear; through the gorge of the pass is dimly seen the cantonment of Hoti Murdan. From the pass the pretty valley of Chumla slopes towards the Indus. Next mount Illum shows boldly against the sky—the great barrier between Boneyr and Swát. Away on the far horizon glistens the snow-capped Hindookoosh, then the valley of upper Swát and lofty snowy peaks of the Lurrum range beyond, the mountains of Kohistan, Khagan and Kashmir, and ends with the well known Pir Punjal. In the foreground here are the valleys of Pukli and Konsh and the sanataria of Murree and Tundianee—a finer view or panorama is impossible.

Bilundkote spur. Tikrí valley.

The spur from Munna-ka-Dunna to Chermung through Bilundkote is very easy,—distance 5 miles. This was the route taken by the force on its way to the Tikrí valley. The Tikrí valley is a pretty little tract, about 8 miles in length and 5 miles in breadth, covering an area of 40 square miles, and about 5,000 feet above sea level, with good streams of water running through it. There is fair amount of rice cultivation, irrigated from the main and small tributary streams, but the principal produce is Indian corn. These crops were cut before the force entered the valley, but the nature of the soil is very fertile. The valley is singularly deficient in trees. Firewood for a force is a difficulty; even the brushwood on the slopes of the hills is deficient. The practicable Chupri Gully enters it from Bhagrian, the Kaim Gully from Konsh, and the Jul Gully from Agrore. This latter is the best and easiest, and is the route chiefly used between the Swátí valleys and Hazara. Up any spur of the Kúbbul a road might easily be made. Over the west end of the Shubora spur, a practicable path crosses to Maidan in Nandihar;—this was repaired for the passage of the force. From Tikrí to Maidan is 7 miles.

Nandihar.

10. Nandihar is a comparatively large valley; a spur from the Pulaija range cuts it in two, dividing it into two long open glens. Water is abundant. Rice is very largely cultivated. Owing to the numerous springs on the Chaela range, as well as on the Shubora and Phugora spurs, irrigation is easy, and rice fields are seen high up the slopes. Indian corn is raised in quantities here, as in the other valleys, and up the hill sides every cultureable plateau, no matter how small, is brought under the plough. Firewood is deficient. Towards the top of Chaila, which is immediately above Maidan, and must be 9,000 feet high, are forests, but the distance is great. Nandihar from Neelishing or Tundoi pass, both leading into Konsh, to Dubrai Gully is about 10 miles long, with an average breadth of 9 miles; its area is about 90 square miles, and it is about 5,000 feet above sea level.

Dubrai Gully.

11. From Maidan to Dubrai Gully is practicable. Above this Gully is a very strong position for troops; ample room for a large force; not commanded or flanked from neighbouring heights, and water absolutely running and taking its rise within the position. Onwards, the path to Takôt is practicable—down the Paimal spur into the Shamrad Nullah over the Chanjul spur into the main Nandihar stream, then up the spur of the Black Mountain north of Koonjboree to the Kurg culmination and Bishkots Gully. These two last overlook and command Takôt, which is a large place, having some 200 houses, and distant about 9 miles—Dubrai Gully must be about 6,000 feet above sea level; Takôt must be about 4,000 feet.

Takôt.

Drainage.

12. The drainage of the eastern slopes of the Black Mountain, north of the Koon Gully spur, of the valleys of Tikrí and Nandihar, and the southern slopes of the Chaila range, all in due course meet and fall into the Indus at Takôt.

Ullahee.

13. Beyond Nandihar on the north lies the large and fertile valley of Ullahee, inhabited by Swátís, having an average length of 20 miles, and a breadth of about 10, and covering an area of some 200 square miles. A high range known as "Undruk" towards the Indus or west end, and "Shumsher" on the east end, bounds it on the north and divides it from Kohistan. It was not visited by any portion of the Hazara Field Force, nor was there any opportunity of getting a look into it, but the writer of this memorandum, upwards of a year ago, saw the end of the valley from a peak over Pogurmung. Its elevation above sea level must be on an average from 500 to 1,000 feet higher than Nandihar and Tikrí, or from 5,500 to 6,000 feet. It is highly cultivated, and abounds in water to points high up the slopes; unlike the other Swátí valleys, it is not wanting in trees; forests of fir clothe the higher ranges, but nothing is said of the existence of deodar. At the eastern extremity are some high plateaus covered with as fine grazing as the hills of Khagan, which could not be beaten by any grazing grounds in the country. The tract is called "Chots" and is a source of constant feud between the Ullaheewals and their northern neighbours the Kohistanees.

Kohistan.

14. North and north east of Ullahee lies the large mountainous tract of Kohistan; it must cover an area of some five or six hundred square miles. The deodar floated down the Indus to Attock is cut in the forests of Kohistan. This timber trade is in the hands of some Syuds, who reside near Nowshera in the Peshawar District. Their object has always been to make out that the trade is carried on under great difficulties; that a large portion of their timber is broken up and lost owing to the numerous rapids in the Indus; and that the forests are a vast distance from the British border—all this is false. The trade is a regularly understood one on the part of the Kohistanees. The appearance of the timber that arrives at Attock justifies the belief that the rapids are of no consequence, if they exist at all, and that the loss is not more than is usual on other rivers; and now that the exact position of the forests is so nearly fixed, we know that their distance beyond the British boundary is not great. Kohistan, as seen from the tops of the high snowy mountains which divide it from Khagan on the east, looks somewhat desolate and bleak; the hills are rocky and not covered with verdure up to the perpetual snow line as in Khagan; but towards the Indus the scene changes and cultivation is extensive. The inhabitants wash gold not only in the Indus itself, but in nearly every stream in their country, and bring it for barter and sale into British territory, going as far as Rawulpindi, Lahore and Amritsur. To the question why they did not search up the streams for the mines of gold that must exist, they replied that they had done so, up to the glaciers of perpetual ice, from under which the gold dust was washed down. The inhabitants are stated to have been only during this century converted to the Mahomedan faith, and this by the pressure of their neighbours. By descent they are said to be Kaffirs; accounts differ as to their strength—some go as far as 40,000 men. Published maps do not show the full extent of Kohistan—the course of the Indus is made many miles too far south. The result of this mistake is that Kohistan and Ullahee are both shown as comparatively small tracts.

Chutta.

15. The Hazara Field Force on leaving Nandihar reached British territory over the Neelishing pass, and encamped in the plain of Chutta in Konsh. This is an elevated plain some 6,000 feet above sea level, about 4 miles in length, and about 3 in breadth; it has numerous streams of excellent water running through it; to its north and east are hills covered with forests. As regards healthy climate and the other requirements for a station for European troops, no better locality could be found; but it is perhaps too near the actual border, and rather far from the Grand Trunk Road.

Map accompanied.

16. The map which accompanies will be a guide to all the localities named.

APPENDIX E.

Dated 25th October, 1868.

From—B RIBBENTROP, Esq., Special Assistant Conservator, Jhelum Division,

To—The Commissioner and Superintendent, Peshawar Division.

Has the honor to forward report concerning forests and formations of country traversed with Hazara Field Force.

South-east slopes of Black Mountain.

The jungle on the lower south-east slopes of the Black Mountain is mostly composed of Berberis and Accacia Modesta; in the Agrore valley some camel-thorn is found. Pinus Longifolia grows on both sides of the valley, and at "Munna-ka-Dhunna" (about 6,000 feet), begins the region of Picea Webbina. In the khud to the north of Chittabut, a few oaks show their lighter green between the pine trees, and near the top of Muchai, some sickly looking horse chesnuts are met with—also a few Abies, Smithiana and one stunted specimen of Cedrus Deodara (above Doda) was found. These forests can never be of any use, except to the villagers themselves as firewood and timber.

North-west slopes.

Value of latter Forests for Peshawur Railway.

The north side of the mountain shows about the same picture, but the forests actually seen are not quite the same extent. The small amount of country traversed gave hardly sufficient insight to fix numbers; but there is no doubt one could draw from the Indus side of the Black Mountain yearly about 15,000 maunds of fuel without exhausting the resources: as the people have only to bring the wood down in small pieces, it would not be impossible, I suppose, to find an enterprising native who would make arrangements and land the wood at Attock from Rs. 15 to 20 per 100 maunds.

Formation of Black Mountain.

The formation of the Black Mountain is throughout granite, with exception of the gneiss spurs down to Tikrí, where the cultivation rising higher on the hill at once shows the more fertile soil.

Gneiss and granite soil.

The Tikrí valley, as well as Nandihar, Konsh and Bogurmang, have a much richer soil than the Agrore valley, the higher part being composed of the easier dissoluble and richer gneiss, while Agrore is quite surrounded by granite.

Deshí slopes.

The Deshí slopes of the Black Mountain down to Tikrí, and further on to Takôt, are again mostly on their higher parts covered with Picea Webbiana, but a greater amount of deciduous trees is intermixed.

Trees in Tikrí valley.

Shabora.

The few trees in Tikrí valley are Poplars, Plane, and Rungar in the gardens, and Umlok trees close to the villages. Shabora, the hill dividing Tikrí from Nandihar, is composed of granite, the people have a tradition of a silver mine which was worked in former times. The heights up to Konsh are gneiss, as also are the northern slopes of Shabora towards Nandihar.

Trees in Nandihar valley.

The Nandihar valley shows the same arbori-vegetation, with the addition of Pinus Longifoha on the foot of Dubrai spur, and some more extensive tracts on top of it.

Ullai.

The slopes of the north sides of Ullai are densely wooded, but the distance was too great to enable me to determine the different species—without doubt a very great part of it is Deodar.

The opposite side of the Indus is overhung by some wooded mountains, and on a cliff in front of Takôt, the Deodar is distinctly to be seen through a telescope.

Opposite the Indus.

From Nandihar, the road leads over a gneiss ridge, covered with low jungle of Accacia and Berberis, into Konsh, and we have the extensive Pinus Longifolia forest before us—extending from Batengra to the foot of Thundiani in a great semi-circle of about 35 miles length by 4 to 7 broad—a forest I repeatedly mentioned in former reports.

Konsh.

The valleys and hills in the east are gneiss, only the spurs branching into Pakhore are granite.

Formation Konsh.

In the middle of the valley, between Chutta and Ahl, are some nice hills of Kaolia of the whitest description.

Kaolia.

Feldspath lime, and vast quantities of firewood are in close vicinity, and therefore any ingredient of China fabrication is at hand.

China ingredients.

The Konsh valley gets quite a lovely European character through a few Kernus and Crategus trees scattered alongside the watercourses.

No. 1375, dated 1st December, 1868.

From—W. S. Seton-Karr, Esq., Secy. to the Govt. of India, Foreign Dept.,
To—The Secretary to the Government of the Punjab.

I am directed by His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 6th of November, No. 958-446, which contains, amongst other enclosures, a letter from the Commissioner of Peshawur on the late operations in Hazara, and which conveys the opinion of His Honor the Lieutenant Governor as to the political results gained, and the effect produced on the tribes of the border, by the late campaign.

2. The Government of India has lately recorded, in the Military Department, a Resolution* expressive of the high sense which it entertains of the services of the troops in a difficult and rugged country, of the nature of their operations, and of the conduct, exertions, and discipline of the soldiers. But His Excellency in Council gladly avails himself of this opportunity to record his opinion on some of the political questions raised in your communication under reply, as regards past operations during this season, and as to the method of dealing with these wild tribes for the future.

* 7th November 1868, published in the Gazette of 9th November 1868.

3. His Excellency in Council desires me to express his concurrence with the views of the Lieutenant Governor and the Commissioner, of the mode in which these wild and excitable tribes should be dealt with in such expeditions, and of the political objects to be sought for by the same, as well as of the amount and character of the retribution at which the avenging forces should aim. It is by no means the wish of the British Government, on such occasions, to desolate by fire and sword a large extent of country: to mark the track of the invading army by long lines of burning villages and wasted fields; and, while thereby inflicting grievous calamities on every section of the native community, to exasperate the leaders, and to render them sullen, and, possibly, intractable for the future.

4. His Excellency in Council thinks it unnecessary to follow in detail the interesting and clear narrative of the Commissioner showing how, by the advance of the forces, and by their systematic, well-considered, and unchecked operations, the above ends were brought about in a campaign of not three weeks' duration. It is sufficiently clear that nothing was left to chance as far as foresight could guard against it, that every reasonable contingency had been carefully provided for, and that when once set in motion, no effort on the part of the tribes could check the progress, or even impede the movements, of the British force. And the Government of India is clearly of opinion that the expense and trouble of organizing and conducting this expedition have produced results not disproportionate with expectations and with motives of State policy, when difficult passes and lofty mountains have been skilfully and rapidly occupied by divisions of British and Native soldiery, when sharp and summary retribution has been inflicted on some of the principal offenders, when considerable fines have been imposed on others, when the heads of tribes have successively tendered their submission to the representatives of the British Power, when roads have been constructed and a survey has been made through a country little known and almost inaccessible, and when, either by the surrender of hostages, or by the acceptance of the terms dictated, or by their altered demeanour, the chief aggressors have given ample proof of their amenability

The 18th December 1868.

No. 1009.

The following extracts from the International Telegraph Convention, signed at Vienna by the delegates of all the countries in Europe and Asia in which there are telegraphs worked by the State, are published for general information.

2. The portions which are not published relate entirely to departmental procedure.

3. The attention of the public is particularly drawn to the rules laid down in Articles 13, 24, 25, 26, 32, 40, 51, and 52.

4. Under Article 9, messages composed of figure or secret letters must be registered, which involves double payment.

5. It is not clear whether commercial code messages will fall within that category, but as messages in words of ordinary language will be allowed to pass, commercial code messages, if in words to be found in Dictionaries, will be accepted as ordinary messages, until refused by other Administrations parties to the Convention.

6. It is, however, to be clearly understood that no refund can, under any circumstances, be made on account of the loss of such messages, unless registered.

7. Under the new tariff the cost of a telegram of 20 words will be:—

Between any place in India east of Kurrachee and London ...	Rs.	28	8	0
To any other telegraph station in the United Kingdom ...	,,	28	12	0

An additional charge of Rs. 2 will be levied on the above for telegraph stations east of Chittagong, or in Ceylon.

8. Arrangements are in progress for the transmission of half-group messages of ten words under Article 32, to take effect from the 1st July 1869. The tariff for this class of messages will be published in due course.

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION.

Revised at Vienna, 1868.

PART I.

THE INTERNATIONAL SYSTEM.

ARTICLE 2.

Between important towns of the contracting States, the service is, as far as possible, permanent, day and night, without interruption.

Ordinary offices performing full day duty are open to the public—

From 1st April to 30th September from 7 A. M. to 9 P. M.

From 1st October to 31st March from 8 A. M. to 9 P. M.

Offices of limited duty have their hours of opening fixed by the respective Administrations of the contracting States.

The time kept by all the offices of the same State is the mean time of the capital of that State.

PART II.

TRAFFIC.

Section I.

GENERAL CONDITIONS.

ARTICLE 4.

The high contracting parties recognise the right of all persons to correspond by means of the International Telegraphs.

ARTICLE 5.

They undertake to adopt all necessary measures to insure the secrecy of messages, and their prompt expedition.

ARTICLE 6.

The high contracting parties however make known that they accept no responsibility on account of the service of the International Telegraphs.

Section II.

ACCEPTANCE OF MESSAGES.

ARTICLE 7.

Telegraphic messages are classed in three categories:—

1*st*.—Government messages: those which emanate from the Chief of the State, Ministers, Commanders-in-Chief of Land or Sea Forces, and Diplomatic or Consular Agents of the contracting Governments; also the replies to these messages.

Messages from Consular Agents who are engaged in commerce, are not considered as Government messages, except when they are addressed to an official personage, and when they relate to Government service.

2*nd*.—Service messages: those which emanate from the Telegraph Departments of the contracting States, and which relate either to the service of the International Telegraphs, or to objects of public interest determined by common accord by the said departments.

3*rd*.—Private messages.

ARTICLE 8.

Government messages are only accepted as such when the seal or stamp of the authority who sends them is affixed.

The sender of a private message can always be called upon to prove that the signature attached to it is genuine. He has, on his side, the power of including in his message the legalisation of his signature.

ARTICLE 9.

A message may be written in any one of the languages used in the territories of the contracting States, or in Latin.

Each State is at liberty to designate which languages, among those used in its territories, it considers to be suitable for international telegraphic correspondence.

Government messages and service messages may be expressed in figures or secret letters, either wholly or in part.

Private messages may also be composed of figures or secret letters when exchanged between two contracting States which admit that mode of correspondence. They will be subject to the conditions prescribed in the service regulations hereafter mentioned in Article 59.

Messages in transit are not subject to the reserve mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

Semaphoric messages must be written either in the language of the country in which is situated the semaphore station which has to signal them, or in the Commercial Code of Signals of all Nations.

Messages which are not admitted as ordinary messages according to the terms of the 1st paragraph of the present Article, are considered as secret messages.

ARTICLE 10.

The message to be transmitted must be legibly written in characters which have their equivalent in the Official Code of Telegraph Signals, and which are in use in the country where the message is presented.

The body of the message must be preceded by the address and followed by the signature.

The address must contain all the information necessary to insure the delivery of the message at its destination.

Every interlineation, reference, erasure, or alteration of words should be authenticated by the sender of the message or by his representative.

Section III.

TRANSMISSION.

ARTICLE 11.

The transmission of messages takes place in the following order :—

1*st*.—Government messages.
2*nd*.—Service messages.
3*rd*.—Private messages.

A message commenced cannot be interrupted to give place to a communication of superior rank, except in case of absolute emergency.

Messages of the same rank are transmitted by the original sending station in the order of their deposit by the senders, and by the intermediate offices in the order of their reception.

Between two offices in direct communication, messages of the same rank are transmitted in alternate order.

At intermediate stations, local messages and transit messages which have to be sent by the same wires, are placed together, and transmitted without distinction, according to the time received at the office.

This rule and that in paragraph 1 can however be departed from in the interest of quickness of transmission on lines where the traffic is continuous, or which are worked by special instruments.

ARTICLE 12.

Offices at which the duty is not permanent cannot be closed before transmitting all their international messages to an office at which the duty is permanent.

These messages are immediately exchanged in the order of their reception between the offices of permanent duty of the different States.

ARTICLE 13.

Each Government remains judge, with regard to the sender, of the route by which it is expedient to direct messages, both during ordinary working, and in case of interruption or block of traffic on the lines habitually employed.

If, however, the sender prescribes the route to be followed, the stations concerned are bound to conform to the instructions given, unless the exigencies of service oppose, in which case no complaint can be entertained.

ARTICLE 14.

When an interruption to communication occurs during the transmission of a message, the office beyond which the interruption exists immediately despatches the message by post (as a pre-paid registered letter), or by quicker means, if available. It is addressed, according to circumstances, either to the nearest telegraph station able to continue its transmission by telegraph, to the terminal station, or to the receiver direct. As soon as communication is re-established, it is transmitted afresh by telegraph, unless its receipt has been previously acknowledged, or, in consequence of an exceptional pressure of messages, its re-transmission would be manifestly injurious to the general traffic.

ARTICLE 15.

Messages which it has been impossible to signal from semaphore stations to the ships to which they are addressed within 30 days of the date of their original deposit, are considered as dead letters, unless the sender has paid for their registration.

ARTICLE 16.

Any sender can, by proving his identity, stop, if in time, the transmission of a message deposited by him.

Section IV.

DELIVERY AT DESTINATION.

ARTICLE 17.

Messages may be addressed either to the place of residence of the receiver, or poste restante, or bureau télégraphique restant (telegraph office waiting).

They are delivered or sent to their destination in the order of their reception.

Messages addressed to place of residence or poste restante, within the delivery limits of the Government messages and service messages may be expressed in figures or secret letters, either wholly or in part.

Private messages may also be composed of figures or secret letters when exchanged between two contracting States which admit that mode of correspondence. They will be subject to the conditions prescribed in the service regulations hereafter mentioned in Article 59.

Messages in transit are not subject to the reserve mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

Semaphoric messages must be written either in the language of the country in which is situated the semaphore station which has to signal them, or in the Commercial Code of Signals of all Nations.

Messages which are not admitted as ordinary messages according to the terms of the 1st paragraph of the present Article, are considered as secret messages.

ARTICLE 10.

The message to be transmitted must be legibly written in characters which have their equivalent in the Official Code of Telegraph Signals, and which are in use in the country where the message is presented.

The body of the message must be preceded by the address and followed by the signature.

The address must contain all the information necessary to insure the delivery of the message at its destination.

Every interlineation, reference, erasure, or alteration of words should be authenticated by the sender of the message or by his representative.

Section III.

ARTICLE 11.

The transmission of messages takes place in the following order:—

1*st*.—Government messages.
2*nd*.—Service messages.
3*rd*.—Private messages.

ARTICLE 12.

Offices at which the duty is not permanent cannot be closed before transmitting all their international messages to an office at which the duty is permanent.

These messages are immediately exchanged in the order of their reception between the offices of permanent duty of the different States.

ARTICLE 13.

Each Government remains judge, with regard to the sender, of the route by which it is expedient to direct messages, both during ordinary working, and in case of interruption or block of traffic on the lines habitually employed.

If, however, the sender prescribes the route to be followed, the stations concerned are bound to conform to the instructions given, unless the exigencies of service oppose, in which case no complaint can be entertained.

ARTICLE 15.

Messages which it has been impossible to signal from semaphore stations to the ships to which they are addressed within 30 days of the date of their original deposit, are considered as dead letters, unless the sender has paid for their registration.

ARTICLE 16.

Any sender can, by proving his identity, stop, if in time, the transmission of a message deposited by him.

Section IV.

DELIVERY AT DESTINATION.

ARTICLE 17.

Messages may be addressed either to the place of residence of the receiver, or poste restante, or bureau télégraphique restant (telegraph office waiting).

They are delivered or sent to their destination in the order of their reception.

Messages addressed to place of residence or poste restante, within the delivery limits of the telegraph office, are at once taken to their address.

Messages addressed to place of residence or poste restante beyond the delivery limits are, according to the instructions of the sender, sent immediately to their destination by post, or by more rapid means, if available.

ARTICLE 18.

Each of the contracting States reserves to itself to organise, as far as possible, a delivery service more rapid than the post, for localities not provided with the telegraph. And each State engages itself towards the others to enable the correspondence of every sender to have the advantages of the arrangements made and notified in this respect by any of the other States.

ARTICLE 19.

When a message is taken to the place of residence and the receiver is absent, it may be delivered to the adult members of his family, to his employés, lodgers, or landlord, unless the receiver has designated by writing a special person, or the sender has instructed that the message be delivered to the receiver only.

When the message is addressed bureau restant (office waiting), it is only delivered to the receiver, or to a person duly appointed by him.

If the message cannot be delivered at its destination, notice is left at the place of residence of the receiver, and the message is brought back to the office to be delivered to him upon his demand.

If the message is not claimed within six weeks, it is destroyed.

The same rule applies to messages addressed bureau restant (office waiting).

Section V.

CONTROL.

ARTICLE 20.

The high contracting parties reserve to themselves the power to stop the transmission of any private message which may appear dangerous to the security of the State, or which may be contrary to the laws of the country, to public order or decency, on condition of immediately advising the Administration to which the original sending station belongs.

This control is exercised by the terminal or intermediate offices, subject to recourse to the Central Administration which decides without appeal.

ARTICLE 21.

Each Government also reserves to itself the power to interrupt the system of the International Telegraphs for an indefinite period, if it judges it necessary, either generally, or only upon certain lines, or for certain kinds of messages, upon condition that it immediately advise each of the other contracting Governments.

Section VI.

RECORDS.

ARTICLE 22.

The originals and copies of messages and the slips containing the signals or similar papers are preserved during at least one year, counting from their date, with all necessary precautions to secure their secrecy.

After that time they can be destroyed.

ARTICLE 23.

The originals or copies of messages can only be communicated to the sender or to the receiver after proving his identity.

The sender and receiver have a right to be furnished with certified true copies of the messages sent or received by them.

Section VII.

SPECIAL MESSAGES.

ARTICLE 24.

Any sender can pre-pay the reply which he requests his correspondent to send.

The delivery station pays to the receiver the amount deposited for the reply at the original sending station, either in money, telegraph stamps, or by a cheque on the office, leaving it to the receiver to send his reply at any time, by any route, and to any address he chooses.

The reply is considered and treated as any other message.

If the original message cannot be delivered, or if the receiver formally refuses the amount deposited for the reply, the delivery station informs the sender of it by a telegram which takes the place of the reply. This telegram indicates the cause of non-delivery, and gives, when requisite, the information necessary to enable the sender to cause his message to follow.

The amount deposited for the reply cannot exceed three times the cost of the original message.

ARTICLE 25.

The sender of any message has the power of registering it.

When a message is registered, the different stations employed in its transmission collate it, as it passes, by repeating it to each other integrally, and the terminal station, immediately after the delivery of the message, despatches by telegraph a service to the sender, announcing the exact time at which it reached its destination.

If the message cannot be delivered, the service indicates the circumstances which prevented it, and gives, if possible, the information necessary to enable the sender to cause his message to reach its destination.

The sender of a registered message can have the service addressed to him at any point of the territory of the contracting States by giving the necessary instructions.

ARTICLE 26.

Any sender can request that a notice of the time at which his message is delivered be transmitted to him by telegraph.

If the message cannot be delivered, this acknowledgment of receipt is replaced by a service giving the information indicated in paragraph 3 of the preceding article.

The sender can have the acknowledgment of receipt addressed to him at any point of the territory of the contracting States on furnishing the necessary instructions.

ARTICLE 27.

Registration is compulsory for messages composed of figures, or secret letters, or considered as secret messages.

ARTICLE 28.

When a message bears the notice faire suivre / to follow without further instructions, the delivering station, after presenting it at the address given, re-transmits it immediately, if requisite, to the new address supplied at the residence of the receiver. It is, however, only required to make this re-transmission within the limits of the State to which it belongs, and it then treats the message as a local message.

If no new address is supplied, it keeps the message in the office. If the message is re-transmitted, and the second station cannot find the receiver, the message is retained by that station.

If the notice faire suivre / to follow is accompanied by successive addresses, the message is successively transmitted to each, until the last, if necessary; and the last office treats it in accordance with the regulations of the preceding paragraph.

Any person, by explaining the necessity, can request that messages which may arrive at a telegraph office to be delivered to him, within the radius of delivery of that office, be re-transmitted to the address which he furnishes, or in conformity with the conditions of the preceding paragraphs.

ARTICLE 29.

Telegraphic messages may be addressed —

To several persons in different places.

To several persons in the same place.

To the same person in different places, or at several residences in the same place.

In the two first cases, each copy of the message should bear only its own address, unless the sender has requested the contrary.

ARTICLE 30.

In applying the preceding articles, the facilities given to the public for pre-paid replies, registered messages, messages to follow, multiple messages, and acknowledgments of receipt, can be combined.

ARTICLE 31.

The high contracting parties engage to take measures for the delivery of messages sent from sea through the medium of the semaphores established, or to be established on the coast of any of the States which shall have taken part in the present Convention.

PART III.

CHARGES.

Section I.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

ARTICLE 32.

The high contracting parties resolve to adopt the following bases for the establishment of international tariffs :—

The charge for all messages exchanged by the same route between the offices of any two of the contracting States shall be uniform. To render this always applicable, a State may be sub-divided in Europe into, at the most, two large territorial divisions.

The minimum charge applies to a message which does not exceed twenty words. The charge for a message of twenty words is increased one-half for every ten words or fraction of ten words above twenty.

Telegraph administrations out of Europe are authorised to admit upon their lines messages of ten words at a reduced tariff; the charge however for the transit of such messages in Europe will be the same as if they contained twenty words.

ARTICLE 33.

The Franc will be considered the monetary unit for international tariffs.

The charges for messages exchanged between any two points whatever of the contracting States should be so regulated that the cost of a message of twenty words should invariably be a multiple of half a Franc.

A Franc will be valued as follows :—

In North Germany—8 silbergros.
In Austria and Hungary—40 Kreuzers (Austrian value.)
In the Grand Duchy of Baden, in Bavaria, and Wurtemburg—28 Kreuzers.
In Denmark—35 Skillings.
In Spain—0,40 Crown.
In Greece—1,11 Drachma.
In British India—76 Pies.
In Italy—1 Lira.
In Norway—22 Skillings.
In the Netherlands—50 Cents.
In Persia—1 Sahibkran.
In Portugal—200 Reis.
In the United Principalities—1 New Piaster.
In Russia—25 Copeks.
In Servia—5 Piasters.
In Sweden—72 Ores.
In Turkey—4,7 Piasters 32 paras medjidies.
Payment can be demanded in value sterling.

ARTICLE 34.

The rate of tariff is laid down from State to State under agreement between the furthermost Governments and the intermediate Governments.

The tariff applicable to the messages exchanged between the contracting States is fixed according to the tables annexed to the present Convention. The charges entered in these tables may at any time be reduced by common consent between the Governments interested. These reductions must not however be effected with the object of creating opposition in rates between existing routes, but to open to the public as many routes as possible at equal rates. No general or detailed modification shall, however, be executed before the lapse of at least one month after notification.

Section II.

Application of Charges.

Article 35.

All that the sender writes in his message to be transmitted is included in reckoning the cost, except as stated in para. 7 of the following Article.

Article 36.

The maximum length of a word is fixed at seven syllables; the excess is counted as a word.

Words joined by a hyphen are counted as so many separate words.

Words separated by an apostrophe are counted as so many separate words.

Proper names of towns and persons, names of places, squares, streets, &c., titles, Christian names, particles, and qualifications, are counted for the number of words employed to express them.

Numbers expressed in figures are counted at the rate of five figures to a word, plus one word for any excess. The same rule applies in counting groups of letters which have not a secret signification.

Every separate character, whether letter or figure, is counted as a word. The same applies to an underline.

Signs of punctuation, hyphens, apostrophes, inverted commas, parentheses, fresh paragraphs, are not counted.

But decimal points, commas, and bars of division used with figures are each counted as a figure.

Letters added to figures to form ordinal numbers are each counted as a figure.

Article 37.

Messages composed of figures or secret letters, or considered as secret messages, are counted as follows:—

All the characters, figures, letters or signs employed in the cipher text are added together. The total is divided by five, and the quotient (plus one for the remainder, if there be any) gives the number of words the ciphers represent.

The signs which separate the groups are counted unless the sender expressly requests that they be not transmitted.

To obtain the full number of words in the message, the address, signature, and any part of the contents in ordinary language must be added to the above; counting according to the rules of the preceding Article.

Article 38.

The name of the original sending station, and the date, hour, and minute of the deposit of the message, are officially transmitted to the receiver.

Article 39.

Every rectifying or completing message, and generally every communication made to a telegraph office relative to a despatch already transmitted or in transit, is charged for in accordance with the rules of the present Convention, except such communication shall have been necessitated by an error of the service.

Article 40.

The charge is calculated according to the least expensive route from the starting point of the message to its destination, unless that route is interrupted, is very circuitous, or the sender selects another in conformity with Article 13.

The indication of the route is transmitted in the preamble, and is not charged for, when sent in the interest of the service.

The high contracting parties undertake to avoid, as much as possible, changes of rates resulting from interruptions of submarine cables.

Section III.

Special Charges.

Article 41.

The charge for registering is equal to the charge for the message.

Article 42.

The charge for an acknowledgment of receipt is equal to that of a single message (1 Rate).

Article 43.

The charge for answers prepaid, and acknowledgments of receipt, to be transmitted elsewhere than to the original sending station, is calculated according to the rate applicable between the point from which the reply or acknowledgment of receipt is transmitted, and the place to where it is addressed.

Article 44.

A message addressed to several persons, or to one person in several localities belonging to different States, is charged for as so many separate messages.

A message addressed to several persons, or to one person, in several localities of the same State, which employs different offices to effect delivery, is charged for as a single message; to this is added as many times the terminal rate of the last State as there are different localities—less one.

A message addressed to several persons in one locality, or to the same person at several places of residence, with or without re-transmission by post, is charged for as a single message; but a copying fee of four annas is charged for each destination after the first.

ARTICLE 45.

A fixed charge of four annas is made for every copy delivered under Article 23.

ARTICLE 46.

Registered messages, or messages requiring acknowledgments of receipt, which have to be sent by post, or deposited poste restante, are registered by the terminal station, which pays the postal charges.

The sending station collects the following supplementary charges :—

For each message to be deposited poste restante within delivery radius, or to be sent by post within the territory of the terminal State—four annas.

For each message to be sent beyond that territory, but within the territory of the contracting States in Europe—seven annas.

For each message to be sent beyond these limits —one Rupee.

Unregistered messages are sent as ordinary letters by the terminal telegraph station. The postal charges, if any, are paid by the receiver, no supplementary charge being made by the original sending office.

ARTICLE 47.

The charge for messages to be exchanged with ships at sea by means of semaphores will be fixed in accordance with the general rules of the present Convention, except that for such of the contracting States as shall have organised this mode of correspondence, the right shall be reserved to determine the charge for transmission between the semaphores and ships.

Section IV.

CHARGES.

ARTICLE 48.

Charges for messages are pre-paid.

The following charges are, however, exceptions, and are obtained from the receiver :—

1*st*.—The charge for messages sent from sea by semaphore.

2*nd*.—The supplementary charge for onward transmission of messages to follow.

3*rd*.—The expense of transport beyond the telegraph lines by quicker means than the post in States where such service is organised.

The sender of a registered message, however, or of a message requesting an acknowledgment of receipt, can pre-pay this transport by depositing a sum for the purpose, to be fixed by the sending station, subject to after adjustment. The service or acknowledgment of receipt states the amount expended.

In every case where charges are to be made on arrival, the message is not given over to the receiver till payment of the amount due is received.

ARTICLE 49.

Insufficient charges received in error, or through refusal of the receiver to defray them in full, should be completed by the sender.

Excess of charges received in error are returned.

Section V.

FRANKING.

ARTICLE 50.

Messages relating to the International Telegraph Service of the contracting States are transmitted free over all the lines of the said States.

Section VI.

REFUNDS.

ARTICLE 51.

In the case of any message which has not reached its destination through the fault of the telegraph service, or which in consequence of serious delay or mutilation in transmission has manifestly not been able to fulfil its object, the full cost of it is returned to the sender by the State which received it, the latter reclaiming, if necessary, from the other States.

In the case of interruption on a sub-marine line, the sender has a right to the refund of the portion of the charge belonging to the distance not traversed, deduction being made, if necessary, of the expense incurred in sending the message by any other mode of transport.

These rules do not apply to messages which pass over the lines of a non-adhering Administration which would not on its side make similar refunds.

ARTICLE 52.

In the cases specified in the preceding Article, the refund rules only apply to the cost of the actual messages lost, delayed, or mutilated, and not to the cost of further correspondence caused or rendered useless by such loss, delay, or mutilation except in the case mentioned in Article 39.

ARTICLE 53.

Every claim should be made, under penalty of rejection, within three months of the date of the message.

This period is extended to six months for messages exchanged with countries out of Europe.

PART IV.

Refers to International Accounts.

INTERNATIONAL SERVICE REGULATIONS.

Forming a Supplement to the Paris Convention.

I.

Art. 1. 1. The wires specially set apart for the International Service are distinctively noted on the Official Map drawn up in conformity with Article 63 of the Convention.

2. These wires are designated by the name of International wire from ..... to .....

3. As far as it is possible, they serve only for the relations between the two towns named as their extreme points.

4. They may be taken from this special service in case of derangement of the lines; but they are to be returned to it as soon as the derangement ceases.

5. These wires are placed under the collective safeguard of the States on whose territory they are erected; the respective Administrations combine their arrangements, so that the best result may be obtained from each wire.

6. The heads of the surveillance parties on neighbouring frontiers communicate with each other direct to insure, so far as they are concerned, the execution of these arrangements.

III.

2. Messages from Consular Agents to which paragraph 3 of Article 7 of the Convention applies are not refused by the original sending station, but the latter signals them immediately to the Central Administration.

3. Messages emanating from the different offices and relating to the contingencies of transmission circulate throughout the international system as services.

IV.

Art. 8. 1. Each State nominates, if it judges it expedient, functionaries or magistrates in each town to legalise signatures of senders of messages. In this case each of the offices of such State checks the authenticity of the legislations which are presented to it, and transmits the following formula after the signature:—

Signature legalised by (designation of functionary or magistrate.)

2. This notice enters in the number of words charged for.

3. In every other case the legalisation is charged for, and transmitted in the form in which it is presented.

V.

Art. 9. 1. As a general rule services messages are written in French; the different Administrations can, however, arrange among themselves for the use of another language.

2. Government messages may be composed of figures or secret letters, either wholly or in part.

3. The same applies to service messages when they emanate from the heads of the telegraph administrations.

4. In private messages which are composed of letters or secret figures, the address and the signature must be written in ordinary language.

5. The body of the message may consist either wholly of cipher, or partly of cipher and partly of ordinary language. In the latter case, the parts in cipher must be placed between two parentheses separating them from the rest of the message which precedes or follows.

6. The part in cipher must be composed exclusively of letters of the alphabet, or exclusively of Arabic figures.

7. The first Administration is judge of the application of the final paragraph of Article 9 of the Convention, especially with regard to the toleration accorded to messages relating to exchange and other commercial subjects.

8. When such messages have been accepted, they cannot be stopped or charged for at extra rates en-route. Any remarks or notifications which they may call forth from departments concerned in their transmission, can only apply to future messages of the same kind.

Without further official instructions.

4. The address of private messages should always be such that delivery can be effected without difficulty or the necessity of making inquiries.

5. For large towns, it should comprise the name of the street and the number, or in default of these particulars, the name of the profession of the receiver, or similar information.

6. For small towns the name of the receiver ought if possible to be accompanied by information sufficient to guide the delivering office in case of any alteration of the proper name.

7. The name of the country in which the residence of the receiver is situate is indispensable, unless it is in a capital or important town. It is included in the number of words charged for.

8. Messages whose addresses do not contain these particulars should nevertheless be transmitted.

9. In all cases the sender supports the consequence of insufficiency of address.

10. The address of a message to be conveyed beyond the telegraph lines is written in the following form:—

M. Muller, Stiglitz express (or post), Berlin, the name of the terminal telegraph station being written last.

11. The address of a message for a ship at sea should contain, in addition to the ordinary directions, the name or official number of the vessel and its nationality.

VII.

Art. 11. 1. Neither Government messages nor service messages enter in alternate order with private messages transmitted by the Morse instrument.

2. The transmission of messages by the Hughes instrument is effected in alternate series. The series is limited to five messages, of whatever description they may be, Government, Service or Private. These five messages are considered as forming a single transmission, which should not be interrupted, except in cases of great emergency. Every message of 100 words or upwards is considered as forming an entire series.

11. With the exception of the cases determined on by the different Administrations in concert, it is forbidden to employ any abbreviation whatsoever in transmitting the contents of a message, or to modify the contents in any way whatsoever. Every message must be transmitted as the sender has written it, following his copy, except in the case provided for in the 3rd paragraph of Article 37 of the Convention.

12. Immediately after transmission, the clerk who has received compares, in the case of each message, the number of words it contains with the number announced, and if there is any difference informs the sending clerk of it. If the latter finds he simply made an error in the number announced, he replies right. If not, he repeats the first letter of each word until he comes to the passage omitted, which is then inserted.

13. Every message is partially collated without extra charge. But registered messages are collated integrally.

15. On the Morse instrument the collation is given by the clerk who has received immediately after the verification of the number of words; the partial collation includes the proper names, numbers (except the date), doubtful words, or words little known.

XII.

Art. 16.

1. When the sender withdraws or stops his message before transmission has been commenced, the charges are returned to him after deducting a fixed sum of four annas, the fee of the original sending station.

2. If transmission has been commenced, the charges received remain to the credit of the States concerned, so far as the signalling has been effected; the remainder is returned.

3. If the message is already transmitted, the sender's only means of requesting it to be cancelled is by a telegram addressed to the chief of the terminal station, for which he must pay. He pays also for the reply, if he desires to be informed by telegraph in what manner his request has been acted upon.

4. Messages of this nature are sent by the original sending station in the form hereafter described. (§ XXIV).

XIII.

Art. 18.

1. The terminal station has right to employ the post.

a.—In the absence of directions in the message of the means of transport indicated by the sender.

b.—When the means indicated differ from the mode adopted and notified by the terminal State in conformity with Article 18 of the Convention.

c.—When there is a claim to be made for porterage to be paid by a receiver who has previously refused to pay such charges.

2. When a message, to be forwarded by registered letter, cannot immediately be registered, it is, in order to take advantage of a postal departure, first posted as an ordinary letter; a duplicate is addressed in a registered letter as soon as possible.

3. Messages addressed to passengers of a vessel arriving in a port are delivered, if possible, before their disembarkation.

XIV.

1. When a sender desires that his message should be delivered into the hands of the receiver only, he must state so in the address.

2. This notice is carefully written on the envelope of the message by the terminal station, and the messenger receives the necessary orders to act in conformity with it.

3. When the receiver of a message cannot be found, the terminal station forwards to the original station a service in the following form :—

No. ..... from ..... addressed to..... Street ..... (name of town). Receiver unknown.

The address given in this service must be the exact reproduction of the address received.

4. The original sending station verifies the correctness of the address, and only replies to the terminal station when there is an error of transmission to be corrected.

5. Each Administration is at liberty to authorize its offices to communicate these services to the senders. But the senders can neither complete rectify, nor confirm the address except by a paid message in the form hereafter prescribed (§ XXIV).

XV.

Art. 20.

The transmission of Government messages takes place by right. Telegraph offices have no control to exercise over them.

XVI.

Art. 23.

The telegraph administrations are under no obligation to communicate the contents or give copies of the messages specified in Article 23 of the Convention, unless the senders or the receivers furnish the exact date of the messages to which their requests refer.

XVII.

Art. 24.

1. When a pre-paid reply is requested, the sender must write after the body of the message and before the signature the notice "Reply paid."

2. Charge is made for a single rate by the same route.

3. The sender can, however, add to the notice "Reply paid" (...fr...c) on depositing the corresponding amount, within the limits authorised by Article 24 of the Convention.

4. The service provided for by the same Article is sent in the following form :—

Paris from Berlin.—No.....

Date .....

Official reply to No..... of.....

The receiver has refused, or cannot be found.

XVIII.

Arts. 25 and 26.

The acknowledgment of receipt, or service, which is returned in the case of a registered message, is given in the following form :—

Paris from Berne.—No.....

Date.....

Message No.....Delivered the..... .. at.....m (or reason of non-delivery).

The acknowledgments of receipt take an official No. from the station which sends them, and are in all other respects treated in their transmission as new messages. They take precedence of services over private messages.

XIX.

Art. 28.

1. The original contents [body] of the message to follow must be transmitted in full to the successive delivery stations, and reproduced in the copy addressed to the receiver, but in the preamble each station reproduces after the words to follow only the addresses to which the message has still to be sent.

2. The demands for re-transmission provided for in Clause 4, Article 28 of the Convention, may be made by post.

3. Each Administration reserves to itself the power of re-transmitting, when necessary, in accordance with the information given at the residence of the receiver, messages respecting which no special instructions have been otherwise furnished.

4 The international charge for messages to follow is simply the charge calculated to the first terminal station ; all the addresses entering in the number of words charged for.

XX.

Art. 29.

1. In transmitting a message addressed to two or more persons, the number of addresses must be indicated in the preamble.

2. The request mentioned in Clause 5, Article 29 of the Convention, must be entered in the address, and consequently be included in the number of words charged for.

3. The request is also inserted in the official instructions.

XXI.

Art. 35.

1. The sender must write immediately after the address of his message any instructions he wishes to give relative to the route by which it is to be sent, its delivery, or to its acknowledgment of receipt ; also the notice of registration, or to follow.

Words, numbers, or signs added by the office in the interest of the service are not charged for.

XXII.

Art. 36

The signal for underline is transmitted before and after the word or passage to be underlined ; but it is only counted as one word extra for each passage underlined : example "The matter is urgent leave without delay," 9 words charged for, i. e., 7 words and 2 underlines.

XXIII.

Art. 38.

1. The name of the original sending station, the date, hour, and minute tendered for transmission are added by the office and written on the copy delivered to the receiver.

2. The sender can insert these notices wholly, or in part, in the body of his message ; in which case they enter in the number of words charged for.

XXIV.

Art. 39.

The messages specified in Article 39 of the Convention have the following form :—

Paris from Berlin.—Service paid.

They take rank with service messages, bear the prefix A, and a number.

2. The receiver of any message can request the correction of passages which appear to him to be doubtful. He deposits for this purpose,—1*st*, the price of a message (single rate) for the demand ; 2*nd*, the price of a message calculated according to the length of the passage to be repeated.

3. The same power is accorded to the sender in case he has reason to suppose that his message has been altered.

4. These charges are returned if the repetition shows that the mutilation of the sense of the message was made by the telegraph. In this case the office at once makes the refund.

5. Charges made for paid service messages remain wholly to the credit of the Administration which receives them, and do not appear in the International Accounts.

6. A Telegraph station which receives a message, requesting the suppression of another message previously received, informs the original sending station by post in what manner the request has been acted upon, unless the sender has pre-paid a reply by telegraph.

XXV.

Art. 48.

1. If the charges to be made by the delivering station are not recovered, the loss is borne by the delivering station, except special agreements have been concluded in conformity with Article 64 of the Convention.

2. The telegraph administrations take, however, as far as possible, the necessary measures in order that charges due on delivery which are not paid by the receiver be recovered from the sender. When such recovery is effected, the department which effects it credits the department to which it is due with the amount.

XXVI.

Art. 50. Telegraph administrations and telegraph offices adopt all necessary measures to diminish as much as possible the number of free service messages.

Information not of an emergent nature is demanded or given by post.

XXVII.

Art. 51. 1. Every claim for reimbursement of charges ought to be made to the original sending department and be supported as follows, i. e., in case of non-delivery, by a written statement from the terminal station or addressée; and in case of mutilation or delay, by the copy actually delivered.

2. If the sender does not reside in the country where he deposited his message for transmission, he can have his claim forwarded to the original sending department through the medium of another department. In this case, if it is evident that the claim is well founded, the latter is deputed to make the refund.

3. In the case of messages not delivered, or which have not accomplished their object, the reimbursement is supported by the departments on the lines of which the irregularities were made which caused the claim.

4. In case of delay the claim for reimbursement is absolute if the message did not reach its destination sooner than it would have done by the post.

5. The integral return of the charges is effected at the expense of the departments which caused the delay.

6. In case of error the claim is only forwarded by the first department to the other Administrations, when it is shown that the message was mutilated to the extent of rendering it unable to fulfil its object. The first department then specifies the errors which led to this result, and the contributive shares of the different Administrations concerned are regulated according to the number of faults thus specified.

7. No. reimbursement is granted on account of errors made in unregistered messages accepted by toleration under the terms of paragraph 7 of Article 5 of the present Regulations.

8. The contributive share for the alteration of a word mutilated successively on the lines of several Administrations is supported by the first of the Administrations in fault.

FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT.

NOTIFICATIONS.

Fort William, the 14th December 1868.

No. 3554.

READ—

A letter from the Officiating Deputy Accountant General, Bombay, No. 2167 A, dated 12th November 1868, enquiring, with reference to the Financial Resolution of the 14th October 1868, directing that in calculating the furlough allowances of a Military Officer on the average salary of the previous three years, all acting allowances should be omitted, whether the order should have prospective effect from the date it was passed.

RESOLUTION.—The Governor General in Council observes that the ruling of the 14th October 1868 was not intended as an alteration but as an interpretation of a portion of Section 5 of the Rules for the grant of leave of absence to Military Officers, published in the General Order of the Military Department of the 19th June 1868, and it should therefore affect all cases, whether they occurred before or after the ruling was issued.

ORDERED, that the foregoing Resolution be published in the Gazette of India.

No. 3563.

The unexpired portion of the extension of leave on medical certificate which, as notified on the 6th ultimo, was granted by the Secretary of State to Mr. L. Berkeley, Assistant Commissioner of Paper Currency, Exchange Department, Calcutta, is cancelled.

The 15th December 1868.

No. 3571.

The following Resolution is published for general information :—

Read the under-mentioned papers regarding the conditions under which salaries are drawn in India, by Officers of the Civil Department on leave :—

Letter from Officiating Accountant General, Punjab No. 88, dated 19th September 1868.
Letter from Officiating Accountant General, Punjab, No. 91, dated 22nd September 1868.
Letter from Financial Department to the Comptroller General of Accounts, the several Accountants General, and the Deputy Accountants General in independent charge.
Letter from Accountant General, Bengal, No. $\frac{A}{1155}$, dated 6th November 1862.
Letter from Deputy Accountant General, North-Western Provinces, No. $\frac{P.A}{1819}$, dated 2nd November 1868.
Letter from Accountant General, Bombay, No. $\frac{A}{5068}$, dated 3rd November 1868.
Letter from Comptroller General of Accounts, No. 3374, dated 16th November 1868.
Letter from Accountant General, Fort St. George, No. 1173, dated 5th November 1868.
Letter from Deputy Accountant General, Hyderabad, No. $\frac{1762}{64}$, dated 3rd November 1868.
Letter from Deputy Accountant General, Mysore, No. 1633, dated 31st October 1868.
Letter from Accountant General, British Burmah, No. 3752, dated 7th November 1868.

RESOLUTION.—Some diversity of practice having arisen as to the conditions under which salary may be drawn in India by Officers on leave, the following rules are prescribed in supersession of all others on the subject.

I. If the Officer signs the salary bill himself, he shall, unless he presents the bill personally for payment, attach thereto a life certificate signed by a Covenanted Civil Servant, or an Officer exercising Magisterial powers.

II.—If the salary be drawn through an Agent, such Agent must be formally authorised in that behalf, and must execute a guarantee to refund over-payments.

III.—When the salary bill is drawn, as in the case of ministerial Officers, by the head of the Department or Office, the drawer of the bill will be held primarily responsible for any overcharge, and no other security will be necessary.

No. 3579.

The following letter to the address of the Officiating Accountant General, Bombay, is published for general information :—

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. $\frac{A}{2065}$ of the 3rd ultimo, enquiring whether the Resolution No. 2703, passed in this Department on the 29th September 1868, applies to Uncovenanted Servants on salaries of less than Rs. 100 per mensem, and in reply to refer you to the order of this Department No. 3420, dated the 2nd ultimo, which has been published in the Gazette of India, and to state that the spirit of the Resolution of the 29th September last, as of other leave rules for Uncovenanted Servants, is applicable to servants on salaries of less than Rs. 100 per mensem.

2. I am desired, however, to add that whenever privilege leave is granted, arrangements should, if possible, be made for the performance of the absentee's work without extra charge to the State, because it was by no means intended, when the Resolution of the 29th September 1868 was passed, that on every occasion of an Uncovenanted Servant being allowed privilege leave, a substitute should be formally appointed to act for him.

The 16th December 1868.

No. 3627.

Mr. R. W. Mathews, an Assistant in the 5th Class of the Financial Department, attached to the Office of the Accountant General, Punjab, is allowed privilege leave for one month.

The 17th December 1868.

No. 3635.

The following Resolution is published for general information :—

Read Office Memorandum from the Home Department No. 1248, dated the 23rd October 1868, and its enclosure, regarding the allowances of Assistant Surgeon H. C. Cutcliffe, as the officer in medical charge of the camp of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces from March to October 1867, and as Officiating Superintendent of the Government Press, and Curator of Government Books in the North-Western Provinces from the 1st July 1868.

RESOLUTION.—Dr. Cutcliffe is permitted to draw an allowance of Rs. 100 per mensem, in addition to the pay and allowances of his rank, for the period for which he was in charge of the camp of the Hon'ble the Lieutenant Governor.

With regard to Dr. Cutcliffe's allowances as Superintendent of the Government Press and Curator of Government Books from the 1st July 1868, it appears that under the second of the rules contained in the Resolution No. 1490, passed in this Department on the 30th idem, regarding the allowances of Military Officers acting in Civil appointments, the Deputy Accountant General, North-Western Provinces, has passed to Dr. Cutcliffe a subsistence allowance of Rs. 250 per mensem in lieu of the military pay and allowances of his rank, in addition to an acting allowance of 50 per cent. on the salary of the Superintendency and Curatorship, but that the Government of the North-Western Provinces doubts the applicability to the case of the Resolution of the 30th July last, because Dr. Cutcliffe is a Medical Officer.

As the appointment in which Dr. Cutcliffe was officiating was one which may be held by a Medical or by any other Military Officer, the Resolution of the 30th July last is certainly applicable to the case; but the Deputy Accountant General has apparently misconstrued the second of the rules contained in the Resolution of the 30th July last. The intention of that rule was not to interfere with any Military Officer's claim to the pay and allowances of his rank, but to restrict the aggregate of his emoluments to the amount which would be drawn as subsistence allowance and acting allowance by a Covenanted Civil Servant of corresponding rank in his position. Under that rule, therefore, Dr. Cutcliffe is entitled to his Military pay and allowances and such an acting allowance as would raise his total emoluments to the aggregate of a subsistence allowance of Rs. 250 and an acting allowance of 50 per cent. on the salary of the offices in which he is officiating; but as the Resolution of the 30th July 1868 was not intended to reduce the allowances which any Officer was drawing at the time of its promulgation Dr. Cutcliffe is permitted, as Officiating Superintendent and Curator, to draw after the 30th June 1868 the allowances he was drawing on that date.

HIGH COURT.

NOTIFICATIONS.

It is ordered that the following rule be read and passed as a rule of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, to take effect from the 12th day of December 1868 :—

Every writ of summons issued from the High Court shall be made returnable within the times herein specified, unless otherwise ordered by a Judge.

In cases where all the defendants reside, and the writ is for service, within the local limits of the Original Jurisdiction of the High Court within one calendar month.

In cases where the defendants or any of them reside elsewhere within the jurisdiction of the High Courts of Fort William or the North-West Provinces within two calendar months.

In all other cases within three calendar months.

Such time in all cases to be computed from the date of the writ: Provided nevertheless that the time for the return of any such writ may be extended by order of a Judge at any time before the writ is returnable.

At the foot of every writ of summons issued from the High Court shall be written a memorandum to the following effect :—

"This writ must be returned to the High Court immediately after the service thereof; or if not served, and the time for the return thereof shall not have been extended by the order of a Judge, on the day of next."

At the expiration of the period limited for the return of any writ, the same shall be returned to the High Court, and the case shall be set down on the Board of Causes for disposal.

GAZETTE OF INDIA.

NOTIFICATION.

The 21st November 1868.

Consequent upon the return of the Viceroy and Members of the Government of India to the Presidency, the Gazette of India will be published at Calcutta until further notice. All communications, therefore, should be addressed to the "Publisher, Gazette of India, Calcutta."

POST OFFICE.

NOTIFICATIONS.

Calcutta, the 30th November 1868.

Referring to the Postal Notice published,* under date the 5th August 1868, respecting the correspondence of Commissioned Officers of the Army conveyed to or from the United Kingdom by British packet, it is hereby notified for general information that paragraph 11† of the notice above referred to has been rescinded.

* Vide page 1304 of the Gazette of India of the 15th August 1868.
† Paragraph 11.—"Officers' letters received in India from the United Kingdom if addressed to the care of an Agent or any other person are not entitled to the foregoing privileges, but are liable to the ordinary rate of postage."

2. The following ruling of Her Majesty's Post Master General, given under date the 7th October 1868, is also published for general information, viz.:—

"The Treasury Warrant of the 27th September of last year relating to the postage to be charged on the correspondence of Military Officers does not, according to the construction placed upon it by this department, confer any privilege on letters other than those specifically addressed to, or actually sent by, the Officer himself.

"It is accordingly considered that it is not open to an Officer, with the view of sending at the reduced rate a letter from his wife, to insert his name in the address as the sender, or for the Commanding Officer to affix his countersignature.

"On this ground it is held that no privilege applies in either of the following cases, viz., that of a letter addressed; for instance—

> Mrs. Jones,
> Care of Captain Jones,
> Her Majesty's 1st Regt., N. I.,
> Belgaum.

"or in that of one addressed—

> Captain Jones,
> Her Majesty's 1st Regt., N. I.,
> Belgaum.
> For Mrs. Jones."

GENERAL STAMP BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. COCKERELL moved that the Bill for imposing stamp duties on certain instruments be referred to a Select Committee with instructions to report in two months. He said that the Bill, it would be seen, contemplated an entire reconstruction of the existing law relating to stamp duties. When he obtained leave to introduce the Bill he had explained generally the principal alterations in the law which were proposed: summarized they were 1st, a complete re-arrangement and simplification of the provisions of the existing law relating to the imposition and realization of stamp duties; 2nd, the extension of the powers of the Civil Courts and public officers in dealing with unstamped and insufficiently stamped documents; and, 3rd, the classification of ad valorem stamp duties. In regard to the first of these heads he had explained that the evidence as to the general unpopularity of the existing law by reason of the complicated nature of its provisions and the difficulty which many persons experienced in ascertaining what the law required at their hands was overwhelming, and that the main object of the present legislation was rather to simplify the law and make it intelligible to the community, than to secure any material increase of stamp-revenue. Whether this Bill, which had now been published for some weeks, was calculated to attain that object sufficiently, or how far the process of simplification might be extended, were matters for the consideration of a Select Committee, to which he hoped the Council would agree to refer the Bill; but he apprehended that, at all events, the very imperfect arrangement of the present law was an undisputed fact, and that it would be admitted that the law needed a thorough reformation in this respect.

As regards unstamped instruments liable to stamp duty he had explained that the provisions of the law for the enforcement of criminal penalties were found to be insufficient for the protection of the stamp-revenue; and that it would be necessary to extend the powers of the Civil Courts in dealing with documents not bearing a proper stamp.

He was not at that time aware that the expediency of maintaining invalidation, as regards their reception in evidence, of unstamped documents, and thereby making use of the agency of the Courts for the protection of the stamp-revenue, was practically ignored by the Bill for defining the law of evidence which was referred to a Select Committee at the last meeting of the Council. The Hon'ble mover of that Bill had stated that, in the opinion of Government, the security which the existing system afforded for the realization of the stamp-revenue could not be abandoned, and he in a manner referred to him (Mr. Cockerell) as having been engaged in enquiries into the working of the existing stamp law for the corroboration of that view. MR. COCKERELL was quite certain that he was justified by the facts which he had ascertained in the course of his enquiries into the working of the stamp law in asserting that the protection which was derived from the existing provision for the invalidation in evidence of unstamped or insufficiently stamped documents could not be dispensed with. Previous to the enactment of Act XXVI of 1867 the annual income from stamp duties amounted to about £2,000,000; about half of that sum, or £1,000,000 was realized from stamps on judicial proceedings, or what was more properly termed Court fees. Of the amount accruing from general stamps, to which alone this Bill was applicable, £200,000 were the proceeds of duty chargeable on bills of exchange and receipts, which class of documents could not be validated by after-stamping. Of the remaining £800,000 no less than £120,000 were realized in the form of deficient duty and penalties levied through the action of the Civil Courts; that was to say, fifteen per cent. of the revenue obtained from documents of the class which, if not properly stamped, could be received in evidence or acted on only after payment of the deficient duty and prescribed penalties, was collected through the direct agency of the Courts. He had therefore no hesitation in saying that it would be a very serious risk to the interests of the stamp-revenue to forego the protection which the present system afforded.

The necessary inference from the fact of so large a percentage of the stamp-revenue being realized through the action of the Courts was that the stamp duties were largely evaded, and that if the protection afforded by that action was to be withdrawn, there would be hardly any check to the increase of such evasions, and the loss of revenue consequent thereon.

For, the loss to be apprehended was not to be measured simply by the amount now realized through the action of the Courts. He argued that if the risk which the present law attached to the execution of instruments not bearing a proper stamp was withdrawn, it would no longer be to the interest of the public to attend to the provisions of the law; that was to say, if a bond debt could be recovered by a suit founded on an unstamped instrument, it was reasonable to assume that persons executing a bond would not be likely to incur the expense of providing a stamp at the time of execution. It had been supposed, however, that the injury to the revenue could be remedied by the provision of more stringent criminal penalties for the evasion of stamp duties.

The extension of the powers of the Courts and public officers in dealing with improperly stamped instruments for the express purpose of facilitating the enforcement of criminal penalties was an important part of the Bill under consideration.

There was no lack of provision of sufficiently severe criminal penalties for proved evasions of stamp duty under the present law, but the difficulty attending their enforcement had been found to render them practically inoperative. As the only remedy for this state of things, the Bill proposed to vest the Courts and public officers with the power of impounding unstamped instruments produced before them which would render the parties thereto subject to criminal prosecution, but if the Courts were no longer bound to take judicial cognizance of unstamped or insufficiently stamped documents, it would be useless to invest them with this power, because the fact of the instruments not bearing proper stamps would in all probability not become known to the Court, and the power of attachment consequently would not be exercised.

Under the present system, the question of any document produced in a Court bearing the proper stamp was raised on the motion of some party to the suit whose interests were affected by its legal validity, but if the invalidating status ceased to be recognized, it was no longer a matter of concern to any person who was not responsible for the interests of the revenue whether the document produced was or was not properly stamped, and the disclosure of evasions of stamp duty through the action of the Courts would, it was to be apprehended, under such circumstances, be of rare occurrence.

The reasons which had dictated the provision of this Bill for extending the powers of the Courts in dealing with unstamped documents seemed to apply with double force to the maintenance of the existing provision of the law, by which the Courts were restricted from taking judicial cognizance of such instruments. He trusted therefore that the invalidation of improperly stamped instruments which had in this presidency been prescribed by the law in force for the past forty years and upwards, and which the present Bill proposed to secure, would on no account be discontinued.

The proposed scale for the equalization of ad valorem stamp duties had been framed as nearly as possible on the model of the English system. Indian rates were doubtless much higher than the rates prevailing in England; but then it must be recollected that the mass of transactions in this country involved much smaller amounts than general transactions in England, and that the reduction of the Indian, to the standard of the English, rates might result in a very serious sacrifice of revenue which the State could not afford to bear.

Moreover, if the English standard of rates was to be adopted, it must be wholly adopted, and this would have the effect of largely increasing the stamp duty chargeable on transactions of small amount, and be consequently oppressive to the very classes which in any scheme of taxation it was the policy of the State to relieve. In England the lowest rate of stamp duty chargeable was 1*s.* 3*d.*, which was equivalent to 10 annas; whereas the starting point in the scale propounded by the Bill was 4 annas; and when he stated to the Council that in Bengal no less than ⅓rd, and in Madras and Bombay ¼th, of the entire stamp-revenue was realized from the stamps of denominations not exceeding 8 annas' value, it would be easily conceived that the adoption of the English rates of stamp duty, whilst it would very probably entail a considerable loss of revenue, might at the same time impose a greater burden of taxation on the poorer classes of the community.

At all events it would be such a complete alteration of the existing law as he was not prepared to recommend. The equalizing process had been so carried out as not to disturb very materially the existing rates; they had been increased considerably in some instances where the subject-matter of the instrument chargeable with stamp duty involved an amount exceeding Rs. 10,000, and on instruments involving a less amount the existing rates were more or less reduced. The net result was undoubtedly in favour of the tax-payer, and especially so as regarded the poorer classes thereof. The scale proposed by the Bill provided an uniform percentage of duty chargeable alike on transactions of large as of small amount, in accordance with the principle on which the scale of ad valorem duties was adjusted under the English stamp law.

He now came to the detail alterations of the law which the Bill contemplated, and which he would endeavour to explain as briefly as possible. By the fourth section of the Bill an ambiguity which attached to the existing law was removed. It had been frequently contended that the language of the 2nd section of Act X of 1862, which provided that—

"for every deed, instrument, or writing which shall be executed from the time when this Act shall come into force, and which shall be of any of the kinds specified as requiring stamps by the schedule annexed to this Act, there shall be payable to Government a stamp duty of the amount indicated in the said schedule to be proper for such deed, instrument or writing—" excluded instruments executed out of British India; the words had been understood to mean "which should be executed in British India." He did not know what reason there was for supposing that the framers of the law intended to restrict its operation to documents executed in India. Such was not the practice obtaining under the English stamp law. By it deeds executed beyond Great Britain were required to bear the proper stamp duty on being made use of in England. The present Bill therefore proposed to leave no doubt on this point as to the intentions of the legislature; it explained that where deeds executed out of British India were made use of within those territories they must bear the stamp required by the Indian law.

By the 3rd clause of section 4 it was provided that an instrument executed out of India before, but becoming obligatory therein after, the passing of the Bill should bear the stamp duty required by it. This had been objected to as an instance of ex post facto legislation and therefore indefensible in principle. He did not think that this objection could be deemed to have any force in its application to the case in point, since no hardship resulted to the executant of the instrument when no penalty or disability could attach in consequence of not properly stamping the document at the time of its execution, and special provision had been made in section 22 by which an instrument executed out of British India, if brought within two months from its receipt into this country, could be stamped without penalty.

The fifth section of the present Bill laid down how stamp duties were to be levied on different classes of documents. There was no specific provision of this kind in the existing law, and that seemed to be an omission which it had been thought fit to supply. Section 6 also laid down rules for fixing the obligation of bearing the expense of any stamp prescribed by the three first schedules; these rules would be found, he believed, to be in accordance not only with the English law, but also with the general practice in this country.

It was not possible to lay down any rules on this subject in respect to the stamps mentioned in the 4th schedule, but as those stamps were all of inconsiderable amount, the question of providing the expense of such stamps might be, without inconvenience, left to the determination of the parties to the instruments on which they were chargeable.

Section 8 proposed some material alteration of the existing law and practice in regard to the mode of levying stamp duties on bills of exchange, and he had no doubt that this was a matter on which the Hon'ble Members of Council who represented the mercantile community would have some objection to urge. Since the publication of the Bill, MR. COCKERELL had been informed that the contemplated alteration was not likely to work well, and he himself had certainly great doubts in the matter. The existing practice was to distribute the stamp duty on bills drawn in sets over each part of the set. Well, it had been thought that, both for the convenience of the public and the protection of the revenue, it would be advantageous if adhesive stamps could be applied to such documents in lieu of impressed stamps. The Hon'ble Member of this Council who had special charge of the administration of the Financial Department could probably corroborate his statement that there had been a good deal of correspondence from time to time in regard to the mode of stamping bills of exchange, and that the practice had undergone much variation. It was a question beset with much difficulty, and would require the careful consideration of the Select Committee. At present MR. COCKERELL understood the practice to be to apply adhesive stamps, and impress those adhesive stamps for the purpose of obliteration with a plain die. That was in substitution for the former practice of stamping with a plain die. He was sure that it was the wish of the Government of India to meet the convenience of bill-drawers consistently with the due protection of the interests of the stamp-revenue.

If it were thought that the practice obtaining under the existing law would be more generally convenient than the provision laid down in the Bill, there would, he believed, be no objection to maintain that practice.

In the fifteenth section of the Bill an alteration was made in regard to instruments executed by or on behalf of Government. That was a point on which difficulties had been found in the working of the existing law. Every person whose transactions with Government involved the execution of an instrument liable to stamp duty claimed exemption from such duty on the ground that, as the Government was a party to such instrument, it was, constructively at least, executed on its behalf. He contended that such was not the intention of the legislature; the instrument was only properly exempted from stamp duty when, but for such exemption, the Government would be bound to provide the expense of such stamp. There was no ground for exempting a person dealing with Government from the obligation of providing the expense of the stamp required for the instrument executed in relation to such dealing which would have unquestionably attached to such person had the instrument been executed in pursuance of his transactions with any other party than Government: the clause had therefore been worded so as to exclude only those instruments for which the Government would be bound, if it were a private party, to provide the stamp.

The civil penalties provided in the 18th section were somewhat in amendment of the existing law. The present law made several distinctions in the amount of penalty to be levied, accordingly as the improperly stamped instrument might be brought to the Collector or the Civil Court within six weeks, four months, or beyond four months from the date of its execution. These minute distinctions seemed to rest on no recognized principle, and were not to be found in the English law. The Bill therefore contemplated the substitution of two grades of penalties for the fluctuating penalties of the existing law, and the adoption, as the period of grace within which a purely accidental omission to affix the proper stamp to any document might be rectified without the levy of any penalty, of the one year allowed by the English law in such cases.

The power of impounding unstamped documents given by sections 20 and 21 he had already adverted to; it would be found necessary to facilitate criminal prosecutions. The objection to the existing law was that criminal penalties could not be enforced, because it was difficult, in the absence of any power of seizing the unstamped instrument, to obtain sufficient grounds for the institution of criminal prosecutions.

The exercise of the power of attaching such documents was made compulsory in certain cases and discretionary in others; this distinction was made for the purpose of obviating possible obstructions to the administration of justice which might result if the Courts were bound to impound every instrument not bearing a proper stamp tendered in evidence or otherwise brought before them.

Section 32, clause 2, was taken from the English law; it laid down that where property was sold subject to a mortgage, the amount of that mortgage should, for the purpose of determining the proper stamp duty chargeable on the conveyance, be taken as part of the consideration money.

This had been objected to, but he thought that the provision was justified by certain other provisions to be found in another part of the Bill under which instruments for the re-conveyance, or purporting to surrender an equity of redemption, of mortgaged property, would be subjected to a mere nominal stamp duty instead of the rates charged, as for a regular conveyance under the existing law.

The 33rd section of the Bill was in substitution of clause 2, section 51, of the existing law, which merely stated generally that any person wilfully inserting in a conveyance a less sum than the amount of the purchase money should be liable to a certain penalty. No doubt that was intended to apply especially to persons employed professionally in the preparation of instruments liable to stamp duty, who were most likely to have the opportunity of making such insertions. The present Bill laid down that such persons, who might be supposed to have a better knowledge than others of the requirements of the law, should undergo more severe penalties than those prescribed by the existing law for offences of this description.

An important alteration was also contained in the clauses relating to the adjudication of doubts as to the proper stamp to be borne by any instrument. The provisions of the existing law on this subject worked unsatisfactorily; they involved a reference to the chief controlling revenue authority, and there was a great deal of expense, loss of time, and risk of injury to documents in transitu entailed by such references; and the consequence was that they were rarely put in force.

The necessity for an improved mode of obtaining adjudications in such cases was fully recognized in the Bill, which had adopted the provisions of the English Statute 13 & 14 Vic., cap. 97, sections 14 and 15.

The appellate jurisdiction of the chief controlling revenue authority conferred by section 38 of the Bill was somewhat in extension of that obtaining under the existing law, the provisions of which, in this respect, were rather conflicting; for instance, by clause 5, section 15 of Act X of 1862, an appeal from the Collector's order in regard to the proper stamp to be borne by any instrument was allowed to the chief controlling revenue authority only when the stamp fixed by the Collector had not been impressed on the instrument adjudged liable to bear it; whereas by section 35 the only exceptions to the power of appeal against the Collector's order were cases in which refund of stamp duty had been granted or refused on the presentation of spoiled stamps, and the Collector's decision as to whether the after-stamping of an instrument executed on paper not bearing a proper stamp should or should not be allowed.

There seemed to be no ground for excluding the orders of the Collector, which were excepted by the existing law, from the control of the chief revenue authority, and the Bill therefore extended the latter's appellate jurisdiction to all orders by the Collector.

The Bill also proposed to confer on the same authority a general power of remission or mitigation of penalties imposed for infringements of the stamp law. This had been objected to on the ground that it was impolitic to vest the chief revenue authority, which was a purely executive authority, with appellate jurisdiction over the decisions of judicial tribunals. The answer to this was that the objection proceeded on a misconception of the nature of the jurisdiction which the Bill conferred on the chief revenue authority. That jurisdiction was not of an appellate character; the revenue authority in the exercise of it did not call into question the correctness of the decision of any Court by which a penalty was imposed for a breach of the stamp law, but simply determined whether in the case in question the interests of the revenue required the retention of the penalty inflicted, or admitted of its remission or mitigation.

The 43rd section of the Bill enlarged the power of refund of duty allowed by the existing law to purchasers of stamped papers. The law required that the paper must have been in some way spoiled and rendered unfit for its purpose to entitle the purchaser or holder of it to a refund of its value. The Bill provided for granting refund on the production of stamped papers not required by the holders, although the papers might not have been in any way spoiled. The same result might be indirectly obtained under the present system, i. e., the holder of a stamped paper, who did not require it, and desired to recover its value, might always attain his object by rendering the stamped paper unfit for use, and thus bringing his claim to a refund of its value within the conditions of the law. It seemed desirable to remedy this state of things, and also to provide for the withdrawal of the power of sale of stamped papers by other than a licensed or duly authorized vendor, should such withdrawal be deemed advisable in the rules regarding the sale of stamps to be framed under section 46 of this Bill.

The provision of the 45th section was taken from an old English Statute (18 Geo. 3, cap. 149); it was designed to protect the revenue in regard to the statement of the true consideration money in a conveyance, by allowing the purchaser, in the event of the full consideration money not being stated in such conveyance, to recover as much as he had paid in excess of the declared amount. The object was to prevent collusion—to create that amount of distrust between the parties to the conveyance which would prevent their acting in concert to defraud the revenue. It might be objected to this that, as the purchaser was bound to provide the expense of the stamp, he might ultimately benefit by his own fraud; but it was clear that the fraud could only take place through the connivance of the seller.

The provision of the 46th section was in substitution of the detailed rules regarding the sale of stamps in the existing law; those rules, it appeared from all the reports received, worked with different success in different places, and it was impossible that any one set of rules should be applicable to the circumstances of all the provinces of the Empire. It seemed therefore better to reserve to each Local Government, subject to the general control of the Government of India, the power of framing such rules regarding the sale of stamps as seemed applicable to the provinces under its control.

Schedule A of the existing law had been divided into four schedules. The object of this division was to simplify the law as much as possible by a distinct classification of all instruments liable to stamp duty, by means of which persons about to execute any such instrument might readily ascertain the stamp duty required on any particular instrument.

If it were possible to attain that object in some better way, MR. COCKERELL would have no objection to any amendment in that direction; according to the present arrangement of the Bill, all documents to which adhesive stamps might be applied were classed together, all other instruments subject to ad valorem duties had been placed in separate schedules according to the rate of duties chargeable, and all instruments subject to fixed stamp duties were placed in a distinct schedule. In regard to the details of the first schedule, the rates on bills of exchange were the same as under the present law, except that on the higher amounts a slight increase had resulted from the process of equalization; this was in a measure, however, compensated by the reduction of the amount of each ascent in the scale between the sums of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 50,000. On the whole, it was probable that the bill-drawer would rather profit than lose by the proposed alteration of the scale.

All policies of insurance had been included under one head, without any distinction on the ground of the amount of premium thereon, and subjected to the same rates of stamp duty as bills of exchange, and as regards many of them the effect was to increase the duty now charged about 50 per cent. By the English law bills of exchange and policies of insurance were subject to similar rates of duty. Bills of exchange in this country had always been subject to a duty of 50 per cent. in excess of the rates obtaining in England; the proposed increase therefore was consistent with the relative proportion of Indian to English rates prevailing in regard to other instruments. There might, however, be objections to the proposed increase of which he was not at present aware; and it would therefore be a matter for the consideration of the Select Committee.

A good deal of objection had been made to the proposed alteration in the third article of this schedule, viz., the stamp duty on transfers in shares. Under the existing law these beneficial rates of stamp duty as compared with that chargeable on other conveyances extended to transfers by deed as well as by endorsement. The Bill proposed to limit such rates to the latter. To this it had been objected that transfers of shares were largely effected by deeds, and that the effect of the exclusion of such transfers from the beneficial rates of stamp duty might be the gradual abandonment of such forms of transfer; a result not to be desired. There might be some ground for this objection, but it would be seen that there was some compensation provided by the proposed change. Under the present law every transfer was charged with stamp duty on the market value of the shares, and the result was that, when a transfer was made from one set of trustees to another, the stamp duty was paid, although the transfer was purely nominal: under the proposed law, therefore, there being no consideration, the transfer would not be subject to stamp duty. Moreover, the English law made no distinction between the sale or transfer of shares, and other conveyances of property, as regards the stamp duty chargeable on such instruments.

There were some other alterations of minor importance to which it was perhaps unnecessary to make particular reference. A distinction had been drawn between instruments effecting a mortgage with transfer of possession of property and mortgage without such transfer of possession; in the former cases the duty, which was on the sum so bound, had been raised to that of a conveyance. Leases had been classed with bonds and conveyances, accordingly as the leases were for a term of one year or in excess of one year. Some objection had been taken to subjecting leases to the same duty as conveyances, but the Bill really made no material alteration in the rates of duty chargeable on leases; as in the case of the equalization of the duties on bonds and conveyances, so here the change effected by the Bill was really in favour of the lessees of property of small amount, or value.

The Hon'ble MR. BULLEN said that he presumed the Hon'ble Mr. Cowie and himself would be placed on the Select Committee to which the Bill would be referred; he would not therefore take up the time of the Council at present, as his (MR. BULLEN'S) objections were to the details of the Bill. He would now merely remark that section 8 of the Bill to which the Hon'ble mover had made special reference had been drawn in entire ignorance of the usual course of dealing with bills of exchange.

The Hon'ble MR. COWIE said he had already received intimation that his name would be included in the Select Committee, and he would therefore refrain from making any remarks at present.

The Hon'ble SIR RICHARD TEMPLE said that, as this Bill immediately concerned the Financial Department, he had been in constant communication regarding it with the Hon'ble mover (Mr. Cockerell), and could, therefore, bear witness to the care, skill, and ability which his hon'ble friend had brought to bear on this important subject; and he would further acknowledge the assistance received on this occasion—as on so many other occasions—from the labours of the Secretary to the Council (Mr. Whitley Stokes).

He (SIR RICHARD TEMPLE) had heard of an apprehension being entertained by some that this Bill would increase the taxation of the people in respect to stamp duties. But he did not at all share this apprehension. On the contrary, while the duties on some of the higher transactions were increased, those on the lower, that is, the great mass of transactions, were lessened: and, on the whole, the change was in favour of the people rather than of the State. So far, then, this Bill was characterized by that principle of equity which pervaded our legislation in this country.

Possibly the revenue under this head would rise hereafter (though that was far from certain). But if such should be the case, it would arise, not from increased duties, but from the extended use of these documents; from the progress of trade; from the growing popularity of the administration.

He (SIR RICHARD TEMPLE) understood Mr. Cockerell to have proceeded on the principle of simplifying and re-adjusting the scale of duties; of rather lowering them on the whole; and of trusting to improved strictness of administration for compensation for any sacrifice of revenue that might result. In arranging this, regard had been given to the model of the English stamp law; local custom had been noticed; the requirements of the traders had been considered; and in prescribing penalties, endeavour had been made to render them as mild, and as little vexatious and inquisitorial, as might be compatible with due enforcement of the law.

On the whole he (SIR RICHARD TEMPLE) was sanguine that, when this Bill should have received all the emendation that might be suggested by the practical and professional knowledge of the Select Committee, it would conduce not only to the benefit of the State, but also to the convenience of the community; and would prove to be a worthy result of the labours of the Hon'ble mover Mr. Cockerell.

The Hon'ble MAHÁRÁJÁ SIR DIRG-BIJAY SINGH said that apparently the only object of this Bill was to define, with more clearness, the provisions of former Acts on the same subject, and so far it was a wise and judicious measure; but from the cursory glance he had been able to cast over the Bill, the stamp duty seemed to him to have been in several instances increased. He trusted therefore that the Committee to which the Bill was about to be referred would make such amendments as might be necessary to prevent such increase.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

EXPROPRIATION BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. STRACHEY, in moving for leave to introduce a Bill to consolidate and amend the law for the acquisition of land needed for works of public utility, said that, before he stated to the Council the reasons which had led the Government to the opinion that legislation on this subject was necessary, it would be convenient that he should state very briefly the nature of the existing law on the subject. The present law was contained in Act VI of 1857 and Act XXI of 1861, but the latter Act contained provisions, for his present purpose, of comparatively little importance; practically it might be considered that the law was contained in Act VI of 1857. When the Local Government came to the conclusion that land was to be taken at the public expense for any public purpose, the first step was that a declaration was made to the effect that the land was required for that purpose under the signature of a Secretary to the Government or some other duly authorized official, and that declaration was taken as conclusive evidence that the purpose for which the land was needed was a public purpose. After such declaration had been made, the land must be taken; the Government could not draw back from the transaction. After the land had been marked out and measured, the Collector made an offer to the owner of the property of a sum which he thought suitable as compensation. If the owner agreed to the offer, the matter was disposed of; but if the offer was not accepted, unless the Collector and the proprietor of the land concurred in the appointment of a single arbitrator, the proprietor appointed one arbitrator and the Collector another, and the two together nominated a third. The decision of those three arbitrators was final, and the award made under the Act could be reversed or altered on no ground whatever, unless it should be decided by a Civil Court that there had been corruption or misconduct on the part of the arbitrators; and practically that was quite impossible to be proved. To all intents and purposes, therefore, the decision of the arbitrators was absolutely final.

Since the extension of railways and other great public works which had been going on to such a great extent during late years, the matter had become of much greater importance than it used to be, and frequent complaints had been made, especially in the Public Works Department, regarding the extremely uncertain manner in which compensation for land had been awarded. The Government had made various efforts to protect the interests of the public; it had called on the local authorities to take increased care in the selection of arbitrators, and had adopted other measures likely to protect the public interests; but practically no effectual relief had been obtained. MR. STRACHEY thought that the imperfections of the existing law would be best shown to the Council by a statement of some cases that had actually occurred within the last year or two. The first case to which he would refer occurred not long ago.

Some years ago in one of the stations of the North-Western Provinces, a piece of ground belonging to the Government was made over to a person who wished to build a house. The Government gave him a lease, at a low rent, for fifty years, renewable at his pleasure on the expiration of that term for fifty years more at the same rate. Adjoining this ground there was a piece of land which had been an old brick-field, and in a large portion of it there were irregular pits and excavations, the result of the brick-making that had gone on there. After the lessee had built his house he made an application to the Government officers with the object of obtaining a lease of this adjoining ground. He represented that it was quite useless for building purposes, and that he only wanted it because, in consequence of the nature of the ground, nuisances were commonly committed upon it. Under these circumstances, and as the land could apparently be turned to no other purpose, he asked to be allowed to occupy it at one-third of the usual rent. This was agreed to, and he received a lease of the ground for fifty years renewable for fifty years more. Two or three months after this had been done, it appeared that the ground must be taken possession of for the Railway Company. The lessee at first consented to give up the land, but he subsequently declined to do so without payment of compensation. The Collector offered to pay Rs. 75 for the surrender of the lease, considering that it was unreasonble to propose to give more, since the lease had only been granted on the assumption, in accordance with the declaration of the lessee himself, that the ground was worthless. The lessee refused this offer, but said that he would accept Rs. 2,000 as compensation, or any other sum that the Board of Revenue might award. It was thought absurd to agree to pay Rs. 2,000 for property which, on the admission of the owner himself, must be almost valueless; and in consequence of the difference of opinion as to what sum ought to be paid, it was ordered that the amount of compensation should be determined by arbitration in accordance with Act VI of 1857. The award of the arbitrators gave to the lessee Rs. 47,400 for this piece of ground for which he had himself only asked Rs. 2,000, or anything that the Board of Revenue chose to give, and for which the Collector thought Rs. 75 a sufficient price. The other piece of ground on which a house had been built was also required for Railway purposes, and the value of this ground and house was determined at the same time by the same arbitrators. For the house the owner had asked Rs. 24,000. The award gave him Rs. 30,200. For the loss of the lease he had asked Rs. 5,000, or, including the compensation for the other lease of which he had been speaking, Rs. 7,000. Instead of this sum the award gave him Rs. 71,200, or more than ten times the highest amount which he had himself ever demanded. If the Government had paid him every farthing that he had ever asked, both for the house and the land, he would have received Rs. 31,000. The sum awarded to him was Rs. 1,01,400. The arbitrators declined to give any reasons for their award, nor were they in any way bound to do so by the law. A reference was made to the Advocate General, who gave as his opinion that "the public money had been absolutely thrown away," but that as the law stood there was no remedy. The money was accordingly paid.

He thought that this case was a sufficient illustration of the manner in which the present law sometimes worked. No one could say that the law was in a satisfactory state when such things as these were possible. Nor must it be supposed that the case which he had given was at all singular. Although it was certainly the strongest case that he had met with, it would be easy to give many other examples of a very similar character, but it was unnecessary that he should take up the time of the Council in quoting them in detail.

MR. STRACHEY did not for a moment intend to assert that in these cases the arbitrators had not usually acted in good faith, although he confessed that he could not believe that that had always happened; there was no doubt that the real foundation of the evil was not in the want of principle on the part of arbitrators, but in the fact that there was a complete absence in the existing law of any statement of the principles which ought to regulate the award of the arbitrators. Nor was the Government the only sufferer by the present state of the law in this respect. In consequence of the total absence of all guidance for the arbitrators in regard to the principle on which the amount of compensation in such cases ought to be paid, it might happen that private interests would suffer just as much as those of the Government. He did not think that there was any really great difficulty in laying down the main principles for regulating, to some extent at least, the price which ought to be paid for land taken for public purposes by Government, although no doubt there might be very considerable difficulty in applying those principles in detail. Thus, he thought that the law should clearly lay down that the price to be paid was not to be what he might call a fancy price; that it was to be the real bonâ fide market value of the property to be taken, with such margin in addition as would compensate the owner fully for any loss and inconvenience caused to him by the forced sale of his property: so also it would be right to make full allowance for injury done to the adjacent land by severing the land taken from the other property of the owner. On the other hand, MR. STRACHEY thought it clear that there were certain considerations which ought not to be taken into consideration in determining the price, although considerations of that kind had, he believed, been practically taken into account. Those matters were, first, the degree of urgency which led the Government to require the land, the disinclination of the party interested to part with the land, and (and this was a matter of much importance) no damages sustained by the owner ought to be taken into account, if it was damage of a kind which, if it had been caused by a private person, would not render such person liable to a suit: further, it was obvious that no damage which after the time of the Government coming into possession was likely to be caused by the execution of a particular work ought to be taken into account, though he believed that as a matter of fact such hypothetical damage had frequently been taken into consideration. Nor, again, was it reasonable to consider any increase to the value of the land which was likely to accrue from the execution of the work for which the land was needed, and it would also be reasonable to lay down that no compensation should be given on account of any improvement effected on the land by the owner with the deliberate intention of enhancing the compensation made under the Act. Again, MR. STRACHEY thought it would be clearly reasonable to provide that the owner of the land should always be called on to declare the price at which he was willing to dispose of his property, and that the Government should also declare the price which it was prepared to give. If the owner and the Government could not agree as to the amount of compensation, it would be right to say that in no case should the sum awarded be more than the price which the owner had asked, and that in no case should it be less than the amount which the Government had offered to give.

MR. STRACHEY believed the mere laying down of simple principles of this kind would alone go very far to remove the practical evils experienced under the existing law, but still he thought there could be no doubt that considerable alterations in the existing procedure were necessary. He had already given a sketch of the principal provisions of the existing law. It had been proved by experience that the plan of leaving absolutely, without any power of appeal under any circumstances, the decision of the amount of compensation to be paid to three arbitrators, was not satisfactory. A question had been raised by some authorities whether it was expedient to retain the system of arbitration at all, and whether it would not be better to refer such questions to the Civil Courts as ordinary suits. There could be no doubt that reference to the Courts would have the advantage of simplicity, and in cases in which the parties agreed to this course, it would be highly desirable to leave the determination of the amount of compensation to a Civil Court: the Court would in fact act as a single arbitrator between the Government and the owner of the land, but it seemed probable that, under ordinary circumstances and in the majority of disputed cases, this course would not be popular, and that it might be said that the subordinate Judges being servants of the Government would be biassed in favour of their masters. But MR. STRACHEY thought that the plan of treating cases of disputed compensation to some extent as if they were civil suits might be still adopted, and that the security of guarding all interests, both public and private, might be obtained. The Bill would be based on that principle. It was proposed that disputed cases should be disposed of by the Judge of a Civil Court with the assistance of assessors, unless the parties should agree to leave the decision to the Judge alone; and in cases of difference of opinion between the assessors and the Judge, an appeal would lie to the High Court. It was proposed that, in the first instance, the Collector, as under the existing law, should make an offer on behalf of the Government: if that offer was accepted, the matter would be finally concluded and settled and the award would be filed in Court; but if the offer was not accepted, the Collector would make an application to the Court to determine the value of the land, and the Court would then proceed to enquire into the case very much as in an ordinary suit. If the parties preferred to leave the amount of compensation to the decision of the Court and have no arbitrators, the Judge would himself dispose of the case; otherwise the Court would call on the Collector and the owner of the land each to nominate an assessor to sit with the Judge to determine the value of the property proposed to be taken. The proceedings and consultations of the assessors would take place in Court before the Judge, and the Judge would decide the points of law that might arise. If the assessors were unanimous and the Judge agreed with them, the award would be final. If the assessors were not unanimous and the Judge agreed with the majority of them, the award would be final; but if the Judge differed from the assessors or the majority of them, there would be an appeal to the High Court from the decision of the Judge either by the Government or the owner of the land as the case might be.

The award of the assessors and of the Judge would distinctly declare the grounds on which the amount of compensation had been awarded, and when the award was confirmed by the Judge, it would become the judgment of the Court, and it would contain, in case of appeal to the High Court, all the information and detail necessary to enable the High Court to form a judgment in the case.

MR. STRACHEY had now only given a rough sketch of the provisions which it was proposed to insert in the Bill, but they of course would require very careful consideration and elaboration in detail; he believed, however, it would be found possible to obtain a procedure which would protect both public and private interests and which would give satisfaction to all parties by providing for the settlement of disputes by a tribunal whose independence would be admitted by all. Whatever care might be taken to avoid delay, there was no doubt that the giving the power of appeal to the High Court would sometimes lead to greater delay than under the present system; but the advantage in many cases of getting the judgment of the High Court would be so great that, even if some delay should occur in the decision of disputes from this cause, he thought the advantage gained would be well worth the price paid.

In speaking of the procedure under the present law, MR. STRACHEY had omitted to mention one matter of some importance in which the law had been found to require amendment. As the law now stood, when a declaration had been once made by the Government under the Act, that a certain piece of land was required for a public purpose, even though it should turn out afterwards that the declaration had been made by mistake, and the land really was not required, and if this conclusion should be come to before any practical action whatever had been taken by the Government, still, having once made a formal declaration, it was impossible for the Government to draw back, even if the owner himself should concur with the Government in the desire that the land should not be taken. Government having begun the proceedings must complete them. Very extraordinary cases had occurred in consequence of this provision of the law. He need not take up the time of the Council in stating these cases in detail; but in some of them, in consequence of the issue erroneously of a declaration that the land was wanted for a public purpose, the Government, although it had really done nothing whatever to actually take up the land and had interfered in no way whatever with any private right of property, had been forced to continue the proceedings and had been compelled to take land not wanted, and to pay large sums for no useful purpose whatever. Those provisions, as they now stood, gave practically no additional protection whatever to private property; while, on the other hand, they put in the hands of unscrupulous persons the means of making the Government pay heavily for errors committed by officers of Government, but which really caused no loss to any one. The Bill therefore proposed that the Government might withdraw at any time before taking possession of the land, being, however, liable to pay compensation for any damages sustained in consequence of the declaration that the land was wanted.

MR. STRACHEY had now given a sketch of the reasons which had led the Government to the conclusion that an amendment of the law was necessary. When the Bill was laid before the Council, it would require very careful consideration in all its details. He would now only add that the Executive Government did not desire to be invested with any powers beyond those which it possessed under the existing law. It asked for no arbitrary authority to interfere with private rights of property. It desired that, whenever it became necessary for the benefit of the public at large to interfere with private rights, the law should not only give protection to the interests of the public, but that, in all the proceedings taken, every possible consideration should be shown not only for the rights but for the convenience of the persons with whose interests it had become necessary to interfere. The Government had in this matter no interest apart from the interest of the public, and in now proposing to alter the law, it desired to obtain every assistance which the public could give in enabling the legislature to arrive at correct conclusions. With this feeling the Government hoped that, when the time arrived for discussing the details of the Bill which it was proposed to introduce, the non-official Members of the legislature, in particular, would give to the Council the benefit of their assistance, and that they would take an active part in the settlement of the details of the measure that might be adopted.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

PROPERTIES OF THE CINCHONA ALKALOIDS.

No. 507, dated 29th October, 1868

From—W. A. GREEN, Esq., Inspector General of Hospitals, I. M. S., L. P.,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India, HOME DEPT.

I have the honor to forward, for submission to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General, a printed report of the proceedings of the Committee appointed by Government to examine the properties of the cinchona alkaloids. The cause of the delay which has occurred in the submission of this report is partly explained in the opening paragraphs. A further delay has been caused, as a supplementary report has for some time past been expected from the Medical College. This will be forwarded on its receipt. I have thought it desirable not to wait any longer for it. As 25 copies of the Report have been printed, I beg to be informed how they are to be disposed of.

From—The Committee appointed to examine the properties of the Cinchona Alkaloids,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India, HOME DEPT.

By a Resolution of the Governor General in Council, dated 24th March 1866, we were appointed to be a Committee for the purpose of enquiring into the relative value of the cinchona alkaloids other than quinine. In accordance with our instructions we have now the honor of submitting an account of the proceedings adopted by us, and a report of the result of our enquiry.

We desire to offer an explanation of the length of time that has elapsed since the receipt of our instructions. Without this it will naturally appear that the enquiry has been delayed or unduly protracted.

At the outset we were of opinion that at least a full year would be needed for experiment. The fevers which prevail at different seasons in India show difference of type and character, and of these it was indispensable to the completeness of the investigation that the largest possible number and variety should be embraced.

Further, we anticipated many interruptions from accidents and the exigencies of the public service: and, even in the event of enquiry proceeding without any such hindrance, we were prepared to learn from officers who might desire to treat the question exhaustively, that a further supply of the drugs than was then at our disposal was needed for the purpose, as well as protracted observation of their effects. We resolved accordingly to apply for a further supply and, satisfying ourselves from time to time that the work was in progress, to refrain from urging haste on the selected officers.

Our estimate of the difficulty of collecting materials for a satisfactory report has fallen short of the truth, and even at this late period we are, to our regret, compelled to draw conclusions from evidence which is much less copious than we had hoped to obtain; and are entirely without information from some sources to which we had looked for much assistance.

Among these sources are included the two institutions on which, from the abundant means and appliances at command and the strength of the medical staff, we had mainly relied for an examination of the physiological properties of the alkaloids; the Presidency General Hospital and the Calcutta Medical College. This deficiency is due to the fact that in the former case, Dr. Palmer, who is said to have devoted much care and attention to the subject, left India before he had completed his experiments; and in the latter, Doctor Francis, who had undertaken the enquiry, was removed by ill health. From the General Hospital, therefore, we have a short and imperfect statement of observations; and from the Medical College we are still without a report.*

Having considered the form which the enquiry might most conveniently take, we forwarded the following scheme, with a supply of the alkaloids, to a number of medical officers, who had, with their own concurrence, been selected by the Inspector General of Hospitals, Her Majesty's British Forces, and the several Deputy Inspectors General of the Indian Army; due attention being paid to the localities where they were stationed as to the known prevalence of malarious disorders.

MEMORANDUM.

The Committee suggest the following proposition, as the basis of the enquiry now being made into the properties of the cinchona alkaloids:—

1. Are the physiological effects of the alkaloids the same in kind and degree as those of quina, viz., gastro-intestinal irritation, action on the pulse and vascular system generally, on the cutaneous function, on the cerebro-spinal system and on the composition of the urine?

2. What are the therapeutical effects (a) of small doses, used for the purposes for which small doses of quina are ordinarily prescribed; and (b) of larger doses, such as those employed when the specific and rapid action of quina is desired; that is as anti-periodics in the various forms of intermittent disorder, febrile or otherwise; and as febrifuges in the severer forms of continued and remittent malarious fevers.

"The Commission seek to do no more than indicate the points on which information is essential to the framing of a satisfactory report on the alkaloids. There are many details of physiological and medicinal operation not included in the foregoing propositions, on which the opinions of individuals or sections of the profession may receive elucidation in the course of a medical officer's enquiry, and new questions may arise out of the facts observed by him from day to day. Particulars on all such points will be full of interest and importance, and cannot fail to further the object which the Government has in view, but their treatment must of necessity be left to the means and opportunities at the command of individual officers. To specify any of them, in a scheme suggested for the sake of uniformity, would probably impede the work in hand by diverting attention from essential matters.

* Since our report we have received from Dr. Ewart, of the Calcutta Medical College, an account of some experiments with the alkaloids carried out during the month of October 1866. The period was limited and the cases not numerous, but their character was strongly marked in every instance, and the result of treatment well pronounced. Dr. Ewart states his opinion in the following "general conclusions" which are fully sustained by the facts he adduces.

Sulphate of Quinidine is an excellent anti-periodic in doses of 5 to 20 grains. It is probably not inferior to quinine, and is easily tolerated by the stomach It is a good bitter tonic in smaller doses, and may be combined with ferruginous medicines. It is less disagreeable to the taste and stomach than quinine, and its use is not accompanied by the unpleasant effects known as cinchonism.

Sulphate of Cinchonidine stands next in anti-periodic power in 10 to 20 grains doses and as a tonic in smaller quantities, it is "agreeable to the stomach" and is not accompanied by symptoms analogous to cinchonism.

Sulphate of Cinchonine is doubtless a powerful anti-periodic in doses of from 10 to 20 grains. "The irritability of stomach caused by it is the great objection to its ever taking rank as a substitute for either of the other alkaloids," but it may be obviated by injecting the medicine in solution hypodermically. It is a good tonic in small doses

"It should be observed that an estimate of the comparative value of the alkaloids with each other will form an important part of the enquiry and the recorded information should have due reference to this.

"In conclusion the Commission would bring to your notice the necessity for providing that each report be fully furnished with the observed facts which have contributed to form the opinions of the reporting officer.

"They may be given either in the text of the report or in the form of an appendix. The latter would be more convenient in reviewing the several papers.

"Medical officers will, no doubt, readily perceive that in order to balance testimony which will, of a certainty, be in some instances conflicting, it is indispensable that the Commission be thus provided with the evidence on which every conclusion is supported."

The reports which we have received are from the officers and stations named in the margin. In analysing them we shall deal separately with the several alkaloids, collating the information which the reports convey, and casting it into the form of the propositions laid down in the above scheme.

Physiological effects of Alkaloids.—On this portion of the subject we have the testimony of seven observers. In six of the reports, however, we have record only of the effects incidentally manifested on patients to whom the drugs were therapeutically administered; which, though of much interest and value, from the uniform quality of operation noticed, give but imperfect evidence of intensity of action, and especially of the comparative potency of the drugs.

It is, of course, by results arising in these circumstances that the therapeutical use of the alkaloids will be influenced; these records, therefore, will have full practical utility; but for the purposes of scientific enquiry into the true physiological effects of the agents it is necessary that careful experiment be made on their action in health. We have been fortunate in receiving a full account of a series of such experiments from Dr. Bensley of Midnapore, which, as far as they go, leave little to desire for closeness of observation, accuracy of record, and careful avoidance of fallacy.

There arises then a natural distinction between the observations of Dr. Bensley and those of the other officers; which distinction we shall recognize by giving them separate consideration, treating the former singly and combining the latter into a general statement of symptoms produced in fever patients by each of the drugs, except in cases where great variety of operation appears to call for specific notice.

Cinchonidine.

Of cinchonidine administered to fever patients there is concurrent testimony to the production of symptoms closely resembling those of quinine; headache, singing in the ears, deafness, giddiness, dimness of sight and muscular weakness. Dr. Fogo, however, has found it less productive of head symptoms than either of the others. He pronounces it to be second to quinine alone in its action on the vascular system, last of all in producing gastro-intestinal irritation and in affecting the urinary and cutaneous secretions. It has not, he says, been found in the urine. In some cases moderate doses (8 grains) of cinchonidine have proved sufficient for the production of these effects, but it is generally remarked that the drug is less potent than quinine. The exception to this rule is the experience of Dr. McSheehy, who "thinks its physiological effects are more marked than those of quinine." Dr. Woods, on the other hand, observes that, "in grave cases large doses may be given without the production of any physiological effects." Thus, upon the whole, great similarity of action is established with quinine, but there is also indication of a natural antagonism between cinchonidine and fever poisons, which disturbs the conclusions and points to the usefulness of special experiment in healthy subjects.

The subjects of Dr. Bensley's experiments were prisoners in jail living under the best sanitary conditions, and the points of enquiry were thus arranged:—

(a). Action of small doses, from three to five grains.

(b). Of large doses, fifteen to twenty grains.

(c). Mixed experiments. Firstly, to ascertain whether certain effects were due to the particular alkaloid employed, or to constitutional susceptibilities with liability to follow the use of all cinchona preparations; and secondly, to determine the comparative strength of the alkaloids.

Of Cinchonidine.—It is reported that in doses of three to five grains it is tonic, promoting appetite. It admits of more protracted use than cinchonine, leaves a bitter taste in the mouth, though not for so long a time as cinchonine.

Gastro-intestinal System.—It produces furred tongue, burning in the stomach and along the œsophagus, seldom griping or flatulence unless thirty or forty grains were used, diarrhœa was not observed, and nausea seldom.

Vascular System.—As a rule no marked increase in the frequency of the pulse was noticed, except after repeated doses of fifteen or twenty grains. Palpitation followed the same conditions. Dryness of mouth and drowsiness, but not the sense of fainting which followed the use of cinchonine.

Cerebro-spinal System.—Giddiness and heaviness of head not very severe. Deafness and noises in the ears not observed after the first few doses, and not very intense. Dimness of sight and other visual disturbance. Feeling of intoxication after very large doses. Little change in the temperature of the body, dilatation and sluggishness of pupils occasionally, and muscular tremors and weakness.

Generally it may be said of cinchonidine that it has no special characteristic effects. Its action is mild, resembling, after large doses, that of both cinchonine and quinidine, but in reduced form.

Quinidine.—Concerning the symptoms, which follow the administration of quinidine to fever patients there is much less unanimity among the several observers.

Drs. Woods, Bleckley and Bateson notice head symptoms as rare in occurrence and slight in character, and Dr. Jackson seldom found any symptoms produced. Dr. Fogo, on the other hand, observed that cerebro-spinal and gastro-enteric symptoms were frequent, even after moderate and small doses. He also met with increased cutaneous and urinary secretion. He places it after quinine and cinchonine in cerebro-spinal effects; second to quinine alone in acting on the vascular system; after quinine and cinchonine on the gastro-enteric system; equal to cinchonine and before the others, on the cutaneous and urinary systems.

Dr. McSheehy's experience gave him the impression that quinidine was generally more active than quinine in producing physiological effects. Dr. Bensley, experimenting as before, records the following conclusions:—

The physiological effects of quinidine in three and five grain doses are the same as those of the other alkaloids. It produces symptoms of cinchonism earlier than either quinine or cinchonidine.

The physiological effects of large doses, from eight to twenty grains are, gastro-enteric irritation of greater intensity than is produced by cinchonine, much nausea and vomiting, with griping of bowels and occasional diarrhœa; the tongue becoming foul and the appetite impaired.

"Vascular System.—Increased frequency of pulse, sometimes diminution of its volume, but in effect only of large and repeated doses, and never marked as in the case of cinchonine. After very large doses palpitation and precordial pain have been noticed, in one instance after twenty grains. There is not that tendency to syncope observed after cinchonine.

"Cerebro-spinal System.—The cerebral symptoms are greater than are caused by any other alkaloid, headache, giddiness; heaviness of head, somnolency, buzzing noises in the ears and deafness; dilatation and sluggishness of pupils, cloudiness of vision and muscæ-volitantes; a bright halo surrounding objects and even diplopia."

As distinguishing features in the action of quinidine, Dr. Bensley notes, dilatation of pupils, visual disturbance assuming a variety of forms; early appearance of cerebral symptoms with great intensity of these from full doses, almost entire absence of fainting or precordial anxiety; a great tendency to intestinal irritation, and not unfrequently augmentation of the pulse. He makes allusion to the published opinion of Dr. Peacock that the nervous effects are less intense than those of quinine, and adds, "the whole series of my experiments is opposed to this opinion."

Cinchonine.

With cinchonine also the opinions of those who have administered the drug to fever patients are conflicting. Drs. Woods, Bleekley, Jackson, and Fogo, do not lay any particular stress on the symptoms produced. They speak of cerebral and gastro-intestinal derangement as similar in kind to that resulting from quinine, and notice occasional slowness of pulse. Dr. Fogo places it after quinine, but before the others in cerebro-spinal effects; after quinine and cinchonidine in acting on the vascular system; second to quinine only on the gastro-enteric system; and on an equality with quinine on the urinary and cutaneous functions.

These observations contrast singularly with the experience of Dr. Bateson and McSheehy. The former was prevented from continuing the use of the drug by the nervous symptoms which even small doses produced, and to the latter, all the effects seem greater than those of quinine.

In accordance with the last opinions are the conclusions of Dr. Bensley from experiments made in health.

Its effects he says, when given in small quantities of two or three grains are the same as those of all other cinchona preparations, acting as a tonic and producing a very lasting bitter taste; its use however does not admit of persistence, even in small doses, without producing its characteristic effects. In one case a few two-grain doses produced many of the symptoms (in a slight degree) which follow the larger quantities. The effects of doses varying from five to twenty grains are as follows:—

Gastro-intestinal System.—Furred tongue, burning in the stomach and œsophagus, flatulence, griping, diarrhœa, in a few instances nausea, occasionally vomiting.

Vascular System.—Increased frequency of pulse, and as a rule, marked diminution of the volume, it being very often a mere flickering palpitation of the heart, precordial uneasiness, frequently very great dryness of the mouth and thirst, augmented respiration, and feeling of great faintness and debility.

Cerebro-spinal System.—Giddiness; headache; heaviness of the head; deafness; singing noises in the ears; vision misty; tremor of the muscles; a feeling of intoxication; inability to stand; and in large doses a great deal of restlessness and a general feeling of distress. The temperature of the body is occasionally slightly raised, but the skin remains soft.

The characteristic effects of cinchonine must be noticed as increased frequency of pulse with diminished volume, palpitation, precordial uneasiness, marked debility and faintness. Even in a few cases, where the frequency of the pulse has not been notably raised, the diminished volume has nevertheless appeared.

It is interesting to observe that in two cases, remittent fever showed itself while the system was experimentally "saturated with cinchonine to a great extent."

COMPARATIVE PHYSIOLOGICAL EFFECTS.—Dr. Bensley concludes this portion of his report with the following observations on the comparative characters and potency of the three alkaloids.

"Cinchonine shows its characteristic effects most prominently on the vascular system. Quinidine equally prominently on the cerebro-spinal and gastro-enteric systems, and produces, in large doses some of, but not all, the peculiar effects of cinchonine on the vascular system. Cinchonidine is the mildest of the three, producing no constitutional disturbance, except in large doses, when it falls into an intermediate position between cinchonine and quinidine, without producing the great augmentation of pulse and tendency to syncope of the former, or the severe gastro-intestinal irritation or dilatation of pupils of the latter. Lastly, and this we append for completeness of comparison, quinine assimilates itself with quinidine in its effect on the cerebral system, but differs from it in giving firmness to the pulse, and seldom increasing its frequency, in not producing as a rule, dilatation of pupils or such varied visual disturbance as quinidine, nor so much of gastro-intestinal irritation. It differs from cinchonine in not inducing palpitation of the heart, or diminished volume of the pulse.

"With regard to the relative potency of the agents, it may be said that cinchonine and quinidine are the most powerful, each however shows its force on a separate system, cinchonine on the vascular, and quinidine on the nervous, system. Comparing the action of equal quantities, cinchonine is found to produce greater disturbance of the vascular, than quinidine does of the cerebral, system. The third place is occupied by quinine, and the last by cinchonidine."

Taking cinchonidine as his basis, and assuming a certain degree of effect to follow twenty-five grains of it, Dr. Bensley considers that the same degree of effect would follow the administration of about twenty grains of quinine, sixteen of quinidine, and ten of cinchonine.

In framing our report on the physiological properties of the alkaloids it will be observed that we have adopted in the main the conclusions of Dr. Bensley, partly from the manner in which his evidence has been obtained, which leads to true physiological inferences, and partly from the internal evidence borne by his report of special attention devoted to this particular portion of the enquiry.

We entertain little doubt, that close analysis of the reports of the other observers would remove some of the more marked discrepancies of opinion. But such a proceeding would add greatly to the length of this paper, and, for the purpose of a general report, would have no value. Under our instructions it concerns us more, at least in this place, to determine whether the drugs, or either of them, have absolute and sure activity, than to enter over minutely into questions of differential detail. Relative potency, with the alkaloids, as with other medicines, is, and must be expected to remain, a matter of opinion and controversy. The main point of medicinal value will be illustrated, and the limits of the physiological action of each drug have been so laid down, that this action may be utilised for the suggestion or modification of practice. It would result only in a fallacious appearance of exactness if these properties were to be isolated, and so deprived of all useful significance, for the mere purpose of casting them into a scale of relative activity.

We have now to examine the reports with reference to the therapeutical properties of the drugs.

CINCHONIDINE.—Dr. Bateson of Umballa, after premising that peculiarity of season had deprived him of opportunity of reporting on the anti-periodic properties of the drugs, concludes from such experience as he had obtained, that it is very doubtful whether this alkaloid possesses any influence over fever. He found it slow in action.

Dr. Palmer observes that, cinchonidine given in much larger doses than quinine is next to it in efficacy. Dr. Brougham, the Surgeon of the General Hospital, in forwarding Dr. Palmers' report, notices that this position is not sustained by the cases recorded, four being successful, and three doubtful; whereas of eleven cases treated with quinidine all recovered. Dr. Palmer notes that, care was taken to exclude from the experiments all very trivial as well as very severe cases, which forbids us to suppose that there was any material difference in the intensity of illness in the two groups. Moreover the average number of days under treatment was with cinchonidine twenty-two, with quinidine seventeen; whereupon Dr. Brougham observes, that so long an average period in ordinary intermittent fever cannot be considered as proof of remarkable success with either drug.

After careful examination of the cases recorded in this report, we find ourselves unable to draw any conclusion from them respecting the action of the drug. The first case, under treatment for three months, must be rejected as not being one of malarious fever. The second was under treatment seven days, but there was no recurrence of fever after the second day, the further detention was therefore precautionary. But the patient received on the same day ten grains of quinine as well as ten of cinchonidine. The third was in hospital from the fourth to the twelfth day of the month; there was no fever after the 6th. The fourth was in hospital from 31st August to 17th September. The nature of the illness was never clearly ascertained, and the termination of the case is not given. The fifth, in hospital from 28th August to 8th September, showed no fever after the 29th. In the sixth and seventh, the nature of the illness was not ascertained. Thus it appears that the third and fifth cases alone support any inference as to the action of cinchonidine, and they are of favorable indication, but the "period under treatment" cannot be accepted as of any significance.

Dr. Woods of Allahabad remarks:—"This alkaloid ranks next to quinine as an anti-periodic." He used it in doses of eight grains every four hours; "but," he adds, "in grave cases, when used from the commencement, fourteen grain doses every four hours were necessary to produce a decided effect."

Dr. Jackson of Meerut reports:—"The sulphate of cinchonidine was given in 273 cases, of which 154 or 56·41 per cent. were successful after one dose. One hundred and nineteen cases were for several days under treatment or 43·59 per cent."

Of these,	11	were 4	days	in hospital.

	2	„ 9	„	„

Or an average period in the severer cases of 5·47 days. Dr. Jackson's experiments with cinchonidine were made in September, October, and part of November, a season when the fever became much more obstinate than it had been during the earlier months of the year, when the other alkaloids were tried. The good effects of cinchonidine Dr. Jackson considers to have been fully established by the low average duration of treatment. He further observes that the undoubted possession by all three, in marked degree, of the anti-periodic properties of quinine, renders comparative estimate of their merits difficult. Some experiments were instituted for the elucidation of this special point, which led to the inference that sulphate of cinchonidine appeared to have "decidedly more effect in suddenly checking the disease than either of the others." It was about equal in value to half the quantity of quinine. Six cases were taken, whereof a dose of 20 grains cured every one on the second day. Dr. Jackson thus concludes his report:—"Of the three alkaloids I am of opinion, and my Native Doctors are the same, that cinchonidine is by far the most valuable."

Dr. Fogo, also at Meerut, observes:—"Cinchonidine is, in many respects, as energetic as the others; and one thing greatly in its favor is, that the physiological effects it produces are not so powerfully manifested, and pass off very quickly."

Dr. Staples (19th Foot) of Nowshera, says:—"It was not found in intermittent fever so efficacious as quinidine, but like that drug, was an useful tonic in convalescence."

Dr. Bensley of Midnapore, whose therapeutical report treats mainly, and his statistics entirely, of the collective value of the alkaloids, makes the following distinctive remarks of cinchonidine:—"It is admirably suited to those cases requiring a tonic or febrifuge, in which at the same time there is great tendency to diarrhœa, or diarrhœa already exists. Among the cases will be found two in which quinine produced irritation of the bowels, but cinchonidine was well borne. None the less valuable is it, in consequence of the mildness of its influence on the nervous system, in those cases which, from peculiarity of constitution, are ill able to bear the more powerful alkaloids."

In continued fevers, Dr. Bensley has had no experience of its use, but he "would prefer it to the others as being least likely to disturb the cerebro-spinal or gastro-enteric system."

He has employed it in small doses of three and five grains. His maximum is twenty grains. He lays great stress on the importance of previous preparation, by unloading the portal system, and concludes by saying:—"I have used cinchonidine extensively in the fevers of children, on account of its mildness, and because it is less liable to produce head and bowel disturbance than other alkaloids. Upwards of thirty of my cases were children varying in age from one to nine years. I have such confidence in it that it is now the only preparation I prescribe for children." Again, "cinchonidine has secured for itself a position perhaps the most exalted of all, inasmuch as it has afforded us a good febrifuge for cases which, from peculiar susceptibilities, were opposed to the administration of quinine."

QUINIDINE.—Dr. Bateson considers that quinidine checks fever equally with quinine, "without its harsh effects it will check fever where cinchonine and cinchonidine have been given largely." "I have given it to natives only, and in doses of ten grains usually."

Dr. Palmer places quinidine after cinchonidine and before cinchonine in efficacy. He gives eleven cases of which we find seven indicate rapid anti-periodic action, the remainder being inconclusive. The "period under treatment" as calculated by Dr. Palmer has, as before, no exact significance, being determined, in a large measure by the precautionary, probably necessary detention of patients after fever had ceased to show itself. The cases are thus in favor of the absolute efficacy of quinidine, but from the numerical insufficiency of those treated with cinchonidine, they fail to indicate the comparative value of the two. The drug was used in doses of twenty grains, once and sometimes twice daily.

Dr. Woods observes:—"In eight grain doses given every four hours, it cured mild cases of fever; but much larger doses, twelve to fifteen grains, were found necessary in severe cases. In one severe case of remittent fever, I gave for two days successively eighty-four grains divided over each twenty-four hours. The drug modified, but failed to prevent exacerbations, although cinchonism was produced. Quinidine proved however, when given in doses corresponding to the severity of the affection, effectual to cure most cases of fever. It is a good tonic in doses of two or three grains."

Dr. Jackson reports as follows:—"Sulphate of quinidine was given in 162 cases. Of those 131 or 80·87 per cent. were cured in one day; 31 cases or 19·13 per cent. were several days under treatment; of these—or an average period of 7·25 days in the less trivial cases. "By this," says Dr. Jackson, "it will be seen that the sulphate of quinidine shows a very much larger percentage of cures after one dose than either of the others; while the average duration of treatment of what may be called the bad cases was considerably less under sulphate of cinchonidine. But in forming the comparative estimate of the value of these drugs, we must consider the season of the year in which they were given." Sulphate of quinidine was given in June and July. And "from its success there must doubtless be eliminated a large average of cases due to the ephemeral nature of the fever which prevailed in June and July.

In the special experiment already mentioned as instituted by Dr. Jackson, to test the comparative power of the drugs in six equally confirmed cases of ague, it appeared that by quinidine two were cured on the second day, and four on the fourth or fifth.

Dr. Fogo assigns to quinidine the third place, after quinine and cinchonidine in efficacy. Its effects he says are very similar to those of quinine to which it is nearly but not quite equal in activity.

Dr. Bensley has found that "quinidine takes the first place in rapidity and number of cures, before even quinine," which peculiarity he connects with its marked physiological action on the nervous system. "It is inadmissible where its tendency to derange the gastro-enteric functions may prove mischievous." He has not administered doses larger than from ten to fifteen grains. "There is," Dr. Bensley says, "a case given of quinine succeeding, where quinidine failed, but the generality of the cases are opposed to quinine being the more powerful of the two." Elsewhere he writes, "quinidine has proved itself more successful than quinine in its therapeutical effects."

To test, as far as possible, this striking result, we have carefully examined the evidence on which it is established; and although Dr. Bensley gives only four cases treated with quinine, against twelve with quinidine, we are forced to conclude, from the previous duration of many of the latter, and the rapidity of effect produced, that the efficacy of quinidine, as exemplified by Dr. Bensley, as far surpasses that of quinine, according to general experience, as it does in the few instances adduced in the report.

CINCHONINE.—Dr. Bateson found cinchonine "so powerless in quickly arresting fever, that it was a hardship upon prisoners to give it to them" in consequence of the severe nervous symptoms it produced. The cases given are unfortunately recorded in such a manner as to render accurate inference impossible, but so far as we are able to interpret them, they do not appear to us to warrant so emphatic a condemnation of the alkaloid as Dr. Bateson has pronounced. A general statement of opinion however based, without doubt, on clinical observation, may have foundation which is not open to criticism on the evidence of an incomplete record of cases.

Dr. Palmer entertains "doubt whether cinchonine can be ranked as an anti-periodic at all."

Seven cases are given in the report, but only three of these appear to us to be illustrative of the question, and they point to early, but not immediate, arrest of fever by the remedy.

Dr. Woods observes:—"In mild cases of fever given in eight grain doses every four hours, it checked the fever, and as a rule without producing any abnormal symptoms beyond, in a rare case, slight headache and giddiness. In severe cases, whether intermittent or remittent, in doses of five to ten grains every four hours, it failed altogether to cure or modify the disease; a less dose than twelve or fourteen grains producing little effect." In severe cases of fever he considers it unsafe and valueless in the same doses as quinine, but administered in "twice the quantity, it proved an equally valuable anti-periodic." Dr. Woods was not inconvenienced by other effects of the drug, but in common with Dr. Bensley, notices syncope as one of them.

Dr. Jackson administered cinchonine in 111 cases. Of these 12 were cured by a single dose or 10·81 per cent.; 99 cases or 89·19 per cent. were for several days under treatment:—

2	were	4	days in hospital.
23	"	5	"	"
42	"	6	"	"
25	"	7	"	"
6	"	8	"	"
1	"	9	"	"

or an average of 6·13 days.

In Dr. Jackson's further experiments with six parallel cases, four were cured on the second day; one on the third; and one on the fourth or fifth. He makes no mention of special inconvenience attending the action of cinchonine.

It should be observed throughout, with regard to the periods under treatment recorded by Dr. Jackson, that we are unable to ascertain how far detention may have been probationary. His cases however are so numerous that a disturbing influence of this kind is of small importance as it tends to work its own correction.

Dr. Fogo considers cinchonine "next to quinine in a therapeutical point of view." In some respects he says it exerts its effects more rapidly than quinine, but the severe frontal headache caused by it in most of the cases, will preclude its ever taking precedence of quinine.

Dr. Staples holds the opinion that its therapeutical effects are very much below those of quinine; that it does not affect the head, and that a dose of twenty grains often fails to arrest a paroxysm of intermittent fevers.

Dr. French of Rajshahye writes:—"I am of opinion that for ordinary intermittent fever, cinchonine is a very useful and effective medicine. For remittent fevers, particularly if they are complicated with head symptoms, I deem its action too slow, and its effect uncertain." He employed it in doses of 5 and 10 grains.

Dr. Bensley regards cinchonine as inadmissible where there is tendency to bowel derangement, in fevers of women and children, and especially with patients laboring under great debility. He considers 15 grains as the extreme quantity that can be given with safety; and with these limitations, includes it in his judgment upon the entire group of alkaloids, which he considers "a valuable addition to our small stock of anti-periodics."

It would seem from the general tenor of Dr. Bensley's report, that he regards cinchonine as inferior in value to quinidine, although in his concluding summary he places it before the latter. The illustrative cases given appear to establish the early and efficient action of the drug, though they would claim for it an inferior degree of efficiency.

General Conclusions.—Having entered as fully as our means permit into the particular merits of each of the alkaloids, it may seem superfluous to state the conclusions at which observers have arrived respecting their collective value. But opinion on the subject has been so emphatically expressed by some of those best qualified to form judgment, and is in some cases accompanied by remarks of so much special technical interest, that it will not be unprofitable if we subjoin the passages which bear on the subject in the reports of those officers who, from the extent and minuteness of their enquiry, are well entitled to speak with authority.

Dr. Jackson's experiments extended over no less than 564 cases. "These alkaloids are all, "he says," possessed of highly anti-periodic properties in malarious fever. They were given in the above number of cases without one fatal termination. It is true that the fever, though generally prevalent among the prisoners, was of a very mild type; the fact however remains that the average duration of treatment was about six days, (here Dr. Jackson omits to reckon the large numbers cured by single doses) and such a result can only be accounted for, by allowing the very marked specific effects of the alkaloids administered I much doubt if such a result could be obtained by the administration of any other of the well-known anti-periodics, always excepting the facile princeps sulphate quinine itself."

Dr. Fogo writes:—"In small doses all the alkaloids produce the same therapeutical effects, that is as tonics, anti-periodics and anti-neuralgics. Hypodermically and internally they have proved successful.

"In large doses they are all equally energetic and produce their effects rapidly. They have been successfully used as anti-periodics and febrifuges.

"We have now three alkaloids in addition to quinine, all of great power. Quinine appears to be the most active and certain in its effects, and from long established reputation, it is not likely to be superseded by any of the other alkaloids, at least not until they become more known. In many constitutional peculiarities where quinine cannot be borne, these alkaloids will be found good substitutes, and they can all be substituted for each other."

Dr. Bensley experimenting on 309 cases thus states his experience, knowing that quinine possesses anti-periodic properties, and finding that the physiological action of cinchonine, cinchonidine and quinidine is in the main similar to that of quinine we are naturally led to expect that the former possess similar anti-periodic properties. We are not disappointed, for a reference to my therapeutical tables will show that they have fully established their claim to such a character; and even more, for we find that quinidine has taken the first place in its rapidity and number of cures; that cinchonine has held a place very little if at all inferior to quinine, and that cinchonidine stands last. Now if we refer to the physiological experiments we shall find that quinidine has held the first place among them also, and, in reviewing its effects upon the several systems we find that it has manifested its influence on the nervous system more powerfully than on the others, and that quinine cinchonine and cinchonidine also manifested a degree of influence on this system, but that that degree of influence followed precisely the same order, as the alkaloids have observed in their therapeutical effects. The conclusion therefore forces itself upon us, that the therapeutic value of the alkaloids depends upon their making an impression upon the nervous system, and that their anti-periodic quality is in proportion to the degree of that impression.

"In remittent and intermittent fevers the value of the cinchona alkaloids is unquestionable. I have not had any cases of continued fever to try them in.

"In my practice, ten grains of quinidine or quinine or cinchonine and fifteen grains of chinchonidine form the maximum dose, and as a rule I have met with no serious disappointments to lead me to adopt larger doses, nor indeed do I think that others would adopt very large doses, in the event of failure with a few moderate ones, were more attention paid to the preparatory treatment of patients. With patients prepared as I have mentioned a failure will seldom occur, but when a few doses of any one of the cinchona alkaloids fail, the failure is due not so much to the quantity of alkaloid given as to the secretory function being still in an abnormal state.

"In all the cases that I have treated I cannot call to mind one which struck me as obstinately unimpressible by any alkaloid. Perhaps I have been fortunate in having, during this season, fevers of an unusually mild type, but I am much disposed to think that a great part of my success has been due to the previous preparation of my patients.

"With a patient previously well prepared for a febrifuge, whatever the alkaloid employed, the fever yielded to it with little or no resistance. In conclusion, says Dr. Bensley, I beg to say that I look upon quinidine, cinchonine and cinchonidine as valuable additions to our small stock of anti-periodics, worthy of as much, if not more confidence than quinine has obtained; one of them quinidine having proved itself more successful than quinine, and another cinchonidine having secured for itself a position perhaps the most exalted of all, inasmuch as it has afforded us a good febrifuge for cases which, from peculiar susceptibilities, were opposed to the administration of quinine.

"So much convinced am I now on this point, that I should feel quite content were I for the future left to deal with all my fever cases with no other preparations than quinidine and cinchonidine."

There is, as we have already intimated, some little confusion, in the several passages of Dr. Bensley's report, in which he adverts to the relative value of cinchonidine and cinchonine, but it is of little moment amidst the strong testimony he offers to the absolute value of all.

The remaining reports, without an exception, record opinions of the same tenor as those now cited on the great utility of the three drugs. On account of this unanimity, we have less reason than we otherwise should have had to regret that the number of reports received has fallen so far short of our expectations. There is no longer room to doubt that the alkaloids are capable of being generally used with the best effects in India. They have been compared with quinine, a drug which possesses, more than any other than can be named, the confidence of medical practitioners here; and have been found, by more than one observer, to supplement this sovereign remedy in some of its points of deficiency. The risk attending their use is clearly not greater than in the case of quinine, nor such as to be in any way deterrent; while the diversity of opinion on their relative usefulness and potency are no more than will be found between any three drugs of the pharmacopœia examined by separate observers, as to reputed similarity of action.

We have the honor to be,

Sir,

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th October last, enclosing a printed report of the proceedings of the Committee appointed to examine the properties of the several alkaloids yielded by cinchona bark, and in reply to convey the thanks of the Governor General in Council to the Committee for their investigations.

2. Possibly the report would have been more valuable had the results of the experiments which were made by the Medical Officers concerned been given in an appendix in their own words. At the same time there would seem to be sufficient ground to warrant the conclusion at which the Committee have arrived that the alkaloids may all be used with great benefit in India.

3. The report will be published in the Gazette of India, and with regard to the disposal of the 25 copies which have been printed and are at present available, I am to request that they may be forwarded for the use of this Department and for transmission to the Secretary of State.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

FOREIGN DEPARTMENT.

PROSPECTS OF THE DISTRICTS UNDER CHARGE OF THE POLITICAL AGENT AT HARAOTIE AS REGARDS SUPPLIES OF GRAIN.

No. 739G, dated 3rd November, 1868.

From—LIEUT. COLONEL R. H. KEATINGE, C. S. I., V. C., Agent to the Governor General, Rajpootana,

To—The Secretary to the Govt. of India, FOREIGN DEPT.

I have the honor to transmit, for the information of Government, copy of a letter No. 116, dated the 24th ultimo, from the Political Agent in Haraotie, reporting on the prospects of the districts under his political charge.

No. 116-57G, dated 24th October, 1868.

From—CAPTAIN A. N. BRUCE, Political Agent, Haraotie,

To—The Agent to the Governor General, Rajpootana.

Having taken the opportunity of my recent deputation to Neemuch to visit all the capitals connected with this agency, including the grain districts of Haraotie, it occurs to me that a brief outline of what came under my notice by personal observation and enquiry may be interesting and possibly useful, and I have the honor, therefore, to report as follows for your information:—

2. As regards the Cantonment of Neemuch itself, I have already submitted to you a letter, as noted on the margin, whereby you will learn that, according to a liberal calculation made for the requirements of the troops, camp-followers, and Commissariat cattle there stationed, the authorities are in command of supplies which will suffice them for the next five months or more, and since despatching that communication, the Cantonment Magistrate has, at my request, furnished me with a statement showing what amount of grain has been purchased by the dealers, which is either en route, or awaiting carriage for exportation to Neemuch. By this document (an extract of which is appended marked A) it would appear that they have 23,936 maunds of grain actually on the road, and a further amount of 24,502 maunds for which carriage is not obtainable, or a total of 48,438 maunds, in itself nearly a year's supply over and above the quantity now in hand; so that at all events the requirements for our Neemuch Brigade have been provided for, and any cause for anxiety on that score satisfactorily allayed.

No. 114, dated 14th October, 1868.

3. I now pass on to Jhallawar. This is not a grain-producing country, and in the best of seasons the amount of grain grown is barely sufficient for local requirements. That part of the country called the "Chowmalla" (so named from the districts of Dig, Puchpahar, Ahor, and Gangror) which extends, to the south well into Malwa, possesses all the rich black soil peculiar to that part of Central India, and the cultivation of opium, for which the land rents very highly, is its chief source of revenue. In a time like the present, therefore, Jhallawar is almost entirely dependent upon importation for food. But this State is happy in having for its Ruler a Chief who is sensible of the responsibilities of Government, and who is as anxious for the well-being of his people as he is desirous of securing the approbation of our Government.

4. The Maharaj Rana assures me that he has made provision for impending dearth, and the principal bankers and corn merchants, with whom I conferred on the subject, confirmed that assurance. The people appeared happy and contented, and no complaint reached my ears of want or distress. Prices obtaining were scarcely in excess of the rates current in ordinary years; and I am sanguine Jhallawar will fall through the crisis without any wide-spread distress.

5. If the necessity shall unfortunately arise, His Highness is fully prepared by every means in his power to alleviate suffering by the inauguration of works of relief; and it affords me great pleasure to bring prominently to your notice this Chief's extreme willingness to look impending difficulties and possible contingencies in the face, the more so as the Maharaj Rana is ever ready to respond cordially in any good measure proposed to him.

6. Leaving Jhallawar, I travelled viâ Sangod and Barrah, the grain districts of Haraotie, districts which when farmed by the great Kotah Minister, Zalim Singh, in the early part of this century, are said to have turned out an area equal to nearly 300,000 English acres under the highest cultivation. When there wasn't a nook or a patch capable of producing grain allowed to remain fallow, and Kotah was termed the granary of this part of India, I gladly observed here the jowar, though backward and stunted, and undoubtedly deficient both in quantity and quality, gave satisfactory promise of a fair out-turn.

7. Complaints, I need hardly add, were rife as regards the total failure of other khureef crops, and not without reason; but such were, as a natural consequence, to be expected. As compared with ordinary years, the harvest was miserably poor, they told me, but comparatively the cultivation I passed through was a most agreeable and refreshing contrast to the aspect of the country I had travelled generally, and the people of Kotah had, it appeared to me, much to be grateful for.

8. Providentially, during the latter end of last month, that part of the country to the east of the Kalee Scinde River was blest by a slight fall of rain; hardly sufficient, it is feared, to have created enough moisture for the rubbee sowings to germinate properly, but still it has encouraged the Zemindars to sow their seed, and though not sanguine, they are not disheartened.

9. Speaking of Kotah generally, then, I have no apprehension of any serious distress being experienced there during the ensuing year. As far as I can learn, there is enough grain in the country for the requirements of the country. Prices will of couse rise, and the people will feel such rise the more severely from having become accustomed to better rates; but at present there would appear fair prospect of their escaping the extremity of want, and I have reason to believe the Maha Rao is not unwilling to aid, as far as he can with justice to his own subjects, others in greater stress than himself.

10. I have strenuously urged upon His Highness that he should do so as far as possible, and he has promised me he will. Upon this point I hope to address you separately ere long.

11. The Durbar are making arrangements for the establishment of poor houses for the relief of the indigent, and, if necessary, to afford them work.

12. The result of my visit to Boondee is also so far satisfactory, that, unless the rubbee sowings fail entirely, I am hopeful this State too will escape without painful distress. The inevitable rise of prices, however, will undoubtedly be felt very seriously, and cause much suffering, inasmuch as the rates of food in Boondee have always ranged comparatively very low, from the strict prohibition against exportation, which, I regret to say, is invariably enforced by this Durbar.

13. I do not mean to infer that the grain resources of Boondee are large, or comparable with those of Kotah in ordinary years, nor is there, doubtless, any great superfluity of production beyond local requirements; but as I have often urged upon the Maha Rao Rajah, restrictions of the nature imposed are doubtless the cause of this; and I am of opinion His Highness is generally backward in lending us that amount of aid which we have fairly a right to expect from him as a loyal feudatory of the British Government.

14. It now remains only for me to speak of Tonk, and of the grain prospects of this place Captain J. Blair has, I doubt not, fully informed you. Personally, I must confess I entertain considerable anxiety as regards Tonk itself. There is no reserve of grain; prices are very high, with an upward tendency; the daily consumption of food is estimated at from 12 to 1,500 maunds, and there is the greatest difficulty in procuring carriage for importation. Consequent upon the dearth of grass throughout the country, there is no forage procurable between this and Agra for anything but camels, and accordingly camels are very difficult to get. I have by great good luck just secured, through the kindness of Colonel MacDonald, a batch of 300, and I am scouring the country for as many as I can get.

15. Active steps are in progress for importing food, but the want of means of conveyance is a very serious obstacle. I will do all that my influence elsewhere can do to overcome this difficulty.

16. I some time ago instructed Captain Blair not to let the State import grain unless the corn merchants evinced inability or disinclination to do so, and he adopted this plan until it appeared to himself and the Regency Council necessary to assist.

17. It is evident to me also that the Tonk Bhunyahs, though apparently willing to do their best, are by no means enterprising representatives of their class, and if trusted to entirely, they would probably fail. At present they are comparatively helpless for want of carriage, and seek aid, and, under the circumstances, I concur with the Regency Council, and see no help for it but to assist. The State will doubtless have to incur the loss of interest which will accrue on money borrowed for this purpose, but loss in some shape or other must be the necessary consequence of a famine.

18. If Jeypore is really prepared to import freely and allow free purchase and exportation, which, with her means of communication with Upper India, would be comparatively easy, then the difficulties besetting Tonk and other places would in a large measure cease to exist; but I am very sorry to say that up to this date grain purchased on the faith of the Maharajah's proclamation has been, and is now, stopped by the local authorities, who urge they have no orders to allow exportation, and serious inconvenience and loss is the result. I have addressed the Political Agent, Jeypore, on the subject, and strongly urged the matter being brought to the notice of the Maharajah, whose proclamation is thus disregarded by his own officials within a few miles of the capital.

19. I would submit for your consideration whether it would not be feasible to organize a bullock train, especially for the transit of grain between Agra and Dhowsa, or Jeypore. One of the chief obstacles, I fear, would be the want of fodder for the animals.

20. Measures for the relief of the able-bodied poor by employment on public works have been commenced at Tonk, and through the exertions of Captain Blair a Poor Relief Fund established by private subscription now affords subsistence to many.

21. A similar institution I am inaugurating at Deolee, which, by the amount of subscriptions already given, promises to be very successful, and will, I hope, alleviate much suffering in the vicinity of that station.

22. I have now touched upon all the important places recently visited by me, and am glad to be able to report to you hopefully on the greater part of my charge.

23. I have the honor to attach a Statement marked B showing the rates which now obtain throughout the limits of the Haraotie Agency. As regards Jehazpore, where they are very high, and the Neemuch districts, I propose to address you separately, as also upon the grass famine.

A. N. BRUCE, Capt.,
Political Agent, Haraotie.

No. 2043, dated 3rd December, 1868.

From—W. S. SETON-KARR, Esq., Secy. to the Govt. of India, FOREIGN DEPT.,

To—The Agent to the Governor General Rajpootana.

I have laid before the Viceroy and Governor General in Council your letter No. 739 G, dated 3rd ultimo, with enclosure from the Political Agent at Haraotie, reporting on the prospects of the districts under his charge as regards supplies of grain.

2. In reply I am directed to state that the information regarding the quantity of grain now available in the Cantonment of Neemuch will be furnished to the Military Department.

3. With reference to the want of carriage which seems a great obstacle to the transport of grain, I am to enquire whether you have any suggestion to offer in support or otherwise of Captain Bruce's proposal to establish a bullock train for the transit of grain between Agra and Dowsa or Jeypore, as contained in the 19th paragraph of his letter.

4. His Excellency in Council also thinks that you might take this opportunity to explain to the Rajah of Boondee the measures which have been carried out by the Maharajahs of Jeypore and Gwalior and other Chiefs in the way of removing all restrictions on the export and import of grain in their territories, and that you might urge on him the adoption of similar steps.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.

DELHI RAILWAY—OFFICIAL OPENING OF THE MEERUT-UMBALLA SECTION.

Nos. 1398-99 R, dated 3rd December, 1868.

RESOLUTION—By the Government of India, PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.

On the 14th ultimo, the Viceroy and Goveror General of India inaugurated, on the invitation of the Agent for the Delhi and Punjab lines of the Sindh Railway Company, the opening of the section of the Delhi Railway between Meerut and Umballa, expected to be in a fit state for public traffic in a few weeks.

2. Attended by the Company's Officials, the local Civil and Military Authorities, and a large number of the residents of Umballa, and others, also by the Maharajah of Puttialla, the Rajahs of Jheend and Nabha and the Nawab of Mulair Kotla and other Cis-Sutlej Chiefs, the Viceroy proceeded by special train to Sahrunpore, stopping to inspect the large bridges over the Markunda and Jumna Rivers. At Saharunpore, the train was met by residents of that station, of Meerut, and of Delhi. After a brief stoppage, His Excellency returned to Umballa, and on arrival, was present at a public entertainment given by the Agent of the Company.

3. The Viceroy availed himself of the occasion to express his satisfaction at the steady progress towards completion of the system of railways undertaken by the Sindh Company, and his appreciation of the labors of those by whom the construction of the Delhi line had been so far, and so rapidly, advanced. The Viceroy particularised the Agent, Major General Sanders Abbott, the Chief Engineer, Mr. Harrison, on whom for a long time had devolved the arduous and responsible duties of Agent, the Contractors, especially their able managing partner, Mr. Charles Henfrey, and the Government Consulting Engineer, Lieutenant Colonel Drummond of the Royal Engineers. His Excellency paid a passing tribute to the memory of Mr. Henry Stone, an Engineer of repute who lost his life last year by an accident to the works.

4. It was with peculiar gratification that Sir John Lawrence presided at the official opening of this extension far into the Punjab of the grand trunk railway of Upper India, to the important Military Station of Umballa. And the prospect which the present state of the works holds out of the early establishment of an unbroken line of iron road, 1,341 miles in length, between Lahore, the capital of that distant frontier province, and the Metropolis of the Empire on the sea-board, enhanced His Excellency's gratification.

5. The Governor General in Council now desires to record the cordial acknowledgments of the Government of India of the good service rendered to the State by the gentlemen already mentioned, and to add that the persevering and successful labors of the members of their respective staff, though necessarily not particularised, are also fully appreciated.

ORDERED, that this Resolution be communicated to the Governments of the Punjab and North-Western Provinces, and to the Secretary of State for India.

Also, that it be published in the Supplement to the Gazette of India.

N. B.—No allowance has been made in the above Table for the time occupied in the transmission of the Accounts from the Province to the Head-quarters.

3. Lastly, the final Account of the Public Works Department for the past year was forwarded to the Comptroller General of Accounts on the 23rd of October, or 40 days later than that of the previous year. The apparent falling off in the last stage of the Accounts operations is due entirely to the books of Controllers' Offices being now kept open until the 31st July. This rule has been introduced at the instance of the Financial Department, in view to the various transactions originating in other Departments being finally adjusted in the Public Works books of the year in which the transactions occur.

4. Tables I and II again show an increased rapidity in disposing of Executive Engineers' Accounts in Controllers' Offices, which I trust will be considered satisfactory.

5. In the disposal of the Executive Engineers' Accounts, the Department, as a whole, was last year ·07 of a month, or two days, behind the standard. This year it is only ·03 of a month, or less than one day in arrear. No Province is three days in arrears, while five Provinces have disposed of their Accounts with complete punctuality.

6. In the rendering of Provincial Returns at the end of the year 1867-68, five Offices were in arrear, giving an average of 11 days' arrears for all India, against three weeks in the previous year.

7. The last Table, giving the dates on which the Annual Accounts of Provinces were received by the Accountant General, shows that on the 15th of August, the date prescribed for this year, six Offices had rendered their Accounts. Two days afterwards three more Offices had done the same, while the average arrear of the Offices generally was less than three days. This Table, I may remark, takes no note of the time occupied in the transmission of the Accounts from the Provinces to the Head-quarters. If the allowance which should be made for this were in each case deducted from the days of arrear entered in the Table, it would be seen that every Province had submitted its Accounts punctually.

8. The following Table shows what has been done in the matter of Stock-taking in the Provinces under the direct control of the Government of India :—

9. With the exception of the North-Western Provinces, the above Table exhibits satisfactory results.

10. As regards the watch over the propriety of Stock rates, the results of the scrutiny at the end of 1867-68 show that the following Divisions are in an unsatisfactory state:—

Provinces.	Divisions.
BENGAL ...	Upper Assam. Lower Assam. Dinapore.
PUNJAB ...	Ferozepore. Peshawur. 1st Division Baree Doab Canal.
OUDH ...	Lucknow. Fyzabad. 2nd Oudh Roads. 3rd Oudh Roads.

11. The different changes and modifications that have taken place in the arrangement of the Department, or in procedure in account, may here be noticed.

1st.—The Straits Settlements were transferred from the control of the Government of India from 1st April 1867. This transfer has been fully carried out, and there are now no claims against, nor dues to, the Settlements remaining on the books of the Public Works Department.

2nd.—In Hyderabad, the Accounts of the Berars (Assigned Districts) have been separated from the Imperial Accounts. This has also been effected without any complication of Accounts; of course, the change involves a little extra work on the Central Office of Accounts, as there are now two sets of Accounts to be prepared, one for the Imperial Divisions, and another for the Assigned Districts. The extra labor has not, however, been of such extent as to necessitate any addition to the Controller's Office Establishment.

3rd.—The Central Office of Account of Central India and Rajpootana has, during the past year, been entirely detached from that of the Controller of the North-Western Provinces, and placed under the charge of a separate Accounts Officer. This has resulted in the creation of an additional appointment, but the more defective audit which may be expected from the new arrangement will sufficiently compensate for the increased expenditure thus incurred.

4th.—With the concurrence of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, all Local Administrations have been empowered to sanction estimates for projects costing not more than Rs. 20,000 in each case.

5th.—The rule, that all charges against "Profit and Loss," (except in the Accounts of Madras and Bombay) must receive the sanction of the Government of India, has been abolished, and now all Local Governments and Administrations directly under the Government of India have authority to pass such charges to the limit of Rs. 1,000 for each charge.

6th.—The adjustment of losses resulting from deterioration of Stock had since 1864-65 been a fruitful source of charges against the "Profit and Loss" Account. Prior to that year, such adjustment was made annually through the "Wear and Tear" Account, any loss being debited ratably to the works completed during the year. Until lately, however, no such medium existed, but it has now been ruled that deterioration shall be charged to Stock, and thus become a charge against Works instead of Profit and Loss, and that after the 30th September 1868, no such debits will be admitted against the latter Account.

7th.—The rule binding a Controller at once to retrench an Officer's salary for undue delay in the submission of his Monthly Accounts, has been so modified that such retrenchments are now only made by the Head of a Local Government or Administration, or under the orders of the Government of India.

12. In Appendix A of the Public Works Code of the Government of India, certain Rules are laid down for the examination of Accountants, 3rd grade, previous to their being promoted to the 2nd and 1st grades, with the view of ascertaining their qualifications in Writing, Dictation, Arithmetic, Composition, Book-keeping, and the Forms and Procedure of the Public Works Account Department.

13. The following Table shows the results of the nine examinations held between 28th November 1863 and 26th August 1868.

So there are 13 men who have failed twice and one who has failed three times.

14. Examinations of this description are among the most useful means of improving the efficiency of a Department, the work of which requires the application of so special and technical a knowledge as that of the Public Works Accounts. Accountants lacking clear ideas of the system they are intended to work upon, not only give themselves much unnecessary trouble, but also either produce confusion, or else put the State to the expense of providing a special superintendence to prevent such confusion. It is satisfactory to find that in this Department, the use of these examinations has been thoroughly understood, and that they have been carefully conducted.

RESOLUTION.—His Excellency the Governor General in Council observes with much satisfaction, that the Accountant General's Report on the state of the business of the Accounts Branch of the Public Works Department again shows results which are highly creditable to the Officers of the Department in respect to the punctuality maintained.

ORDER.—Ordered, that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to all Local Governments and Administrations; to the Financial Department, and to the Accountant General, Public Works Department, for information.

Also, that the Resolution and the Report be published in the Supplement of the Gazette of India, and that a copy of both be forwarded to the Secretary of State for India.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS ON GRAIN TRADE IN THE JEYPORE TERRITORY.

Dated 16th October, 1868.

From—His Excellency the Right Hon'ble SIR J. L. M. LAWRENCE, G. C. B., G. M. S. I., Viceroy and Governor General of India,

To—His Highness the Maharajah of Jeypore.

My Agent in Rajpootana has informed me that, in these times of distress, caused by the failure of crops, your Highness has generously removed all restrictions on the grain traffic of your territory and abandoned the collection of every description of tax on grain.

This intelligence has given me very great satisfaction. The liberal policy which your Highness has initiated redounds greatly to your reputation as an enlightened ruler, who has the welfare and prosperity of his subjects at heart. It is an act which is highly appreciated by the Government of India, and entitles you to their best thanks.

I shall have much pleasure in re-publishing the notification issued by your Highness, and trust that it may act as an incentive to all the other chiefs in India to imitate your good example.

Dated 16th November, 1868.

From—S. RAM SING, Maharajah of Jeypore,

To—His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India.

MY HIGHLY ESTEEMED AND RESPECTED FRIEND,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's favor of the 15th ultimo, forwarded to me through Colonel Keatinge, your Agent in Rajpootana, and in reply to offer you my heartfelt thanks for the very kind and friendly expressions therein conveyed, with reference to my late act, which has removed all restrictions and State charges on the grain traffic within the Territories of Jeypore. I feel more highly gratified to know that the Government of India so truly appreciates my motive and my desire to promote the welfare and prosperity of my subjects, whose interests I have always at heart.

2. I feel proud of the degree of importance your Excellency attaches to this measure, as evidenced by your desire, as therein expressed, to give the Proclamation greater publicity, and I find it has accordingly been re-published in the Gazette of India of the 17th October, accompanied with a very kind expression of your Excellency's opinion of the policy which dictated this timely act of relief, a circumstance which is highly gratifying to my feelings, and which it will be my constant endeavour to merit, though I must frankly confess, I do not consider I am entitled to the commendation so graciously bestowed upon me for what I know and feel to be a duty incumbent on every Ruler of a country, viz., to afford his best aid, both directly and indirectly, towards relieving the sufferings of our fellow-beings. If, therefore, I have contributed, in any degree, towards the alleviation of distress at a time like this, when famine threatens the land and numbers of poor and helpless beings are starving for want of food, I have done no more than what humanity and fellow feeling demand at the hands of every man, and more specially of every Sovereign, whose well being is identified with that of his own subjects, and no earthly consideration that I am aware of should deter him from adopting any policy which is calculated to mitigate such a dire calamity whatever may be the extent or magnitude of the sacrifice he may thereby be obliged to make.

I beg to express the high consideration I entertain of your Excellency, and to subscribe myself

Your Excellency's sincere friend,

S. RAM SING.

MEASURE ADOPTED BY THE MAHARAJAH OF KEROWLIE TO MEET THE CRISIS CAUSED BY THE FAILURE OF CROPS.

No. 836G, dated 28th November, 1868.

From—LIEUT. COL. R. H. KEATINGE, Agent to the Governor General, Rajpootana,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India, FOREIGN DEPARTMENT.

I have the honor to forward, for the information of Government, translation of a khureeta from His Highness the Maharajah of Kerowlie, G. C. S. I., to my address, detailing the measures His Highness has adopted to meet the crisis caused by the failure of crops and the impending famine.

Dated 31st October, 1868.

Translation of a Khureeta from His Highness the Maharajah of Kerowlie, G. C. S. I., to the Agent Governor General, Rajpootana.

AFTER COMPLIMENTS,—I received on the 29th instant your letter, dated 23rd September, together with the circular regarding taking measures for the relief of the famine-stricken.

I deeply regret the last harvest, the khureef which has been lost for want of rain, and I much fear that the rubbee will be lost likewise. There is, indeed, for the most part throughout the State a rain crop only, so that in any case it is worse off than most of its neighbours.

There is, then, especial need for aiding the people at the present time, and my attention is entirely given to it. I will detail to you the steps I have taken after mature deliberation and discussion.

1. The transit duties to be excused for a year, and a proclamation for the information of the traders has been issued to that effect.

2. To induce traders to bring grain from Agra, advances are being made to them.

3. Within the city at each of the six gates, as well as at various places within the State, food ("ata," "dal," and cooked "rotee") is distributed gratis to the indigent.

4. The revenue to be collected leniently, thus—from those whose crops have been lost nothing is taken, from those whose crops are injured and are in difficulties, the Government demand should be by "butaie" (or share); moreover, only the grain is to be divided, not the straw.

Those who have wells and can afford it, will of course pay the usual rate.

5. Buildings to be carried on on a larger scale, such as tanks, bunds, &c., so that the poor may earn food, and the State be hereafter benefited.

I know these measures will greatly assist my object; and, if I am informed of the relief arrangements in British territory, I will adopt them myself.

P. W. POWLETT,
Assistant Agent, Governor General.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

CONDITION OF THE INDIAN IMMIGRANTS IN ST. LUCIA AND ST. VINCENT, DURING THE HALF YEAR ENDING 30th JUNE 1868.

PUBLIC.
No. 163.

INDIA OFFICE;
London, 31*st October* 1868.

To His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council.

In continuation of my Despatches of the 14th and 28th May last, Nos. 93 and 101 respectively, I transmit, for the information of your Excellency in Council, copy of two Despatches noted in the margin, from the Acting Governor of the Windward Islands to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, forwarding very satisfactory reports on the condition of immigrants in St. Lucia and St. Vincent for the half-year ending 30th June last, together with observations of the Emigration Commissioners on each of these reports.

St. Lucia, No. 476, dated 31st August 1868, and enclosures.
St. Vincent, No. 574, dated 5th September 1868, and enclosures.

Dated 10th and 12th October 1868.

I have, &c.,
Your most obedient Servant,
STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE.

No. 476, dated 31st August, 1868.

From—His Excellency R. M. MUNDY, Lieutenant Governor of the Windward Islands, Barbados,
To—His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, &c., &c., &c.

I have the honor to transmit to your Grace a Despatch* from the Administrator of St. Lucia, enclosing very satisfactory half-yearly reports to the 30th June from the Immigration Agent of that Colony on the condition of the Indian immigrants and liberated Africans.

* No. 146, dated 18th August 1868.

No. 146, dated 18th August, 1868.

From—M. DIX, Esq., Administrator of St. Lucia,
To—His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor of the Windward Islands, Barbados.

I have the honor to transmit to your Excellency herewith copies of the Immigration Agent's reports, with the usual returns annexed to them, on the African and Indian immigrants in this colony for the half-year ending the 30th of June last.

2. There is nothing in these reports requiring any special remark from me. They exhibit the condition of both classes of immigrants to be most satisfactory, and the only regret is that so many of the Indian immigrants are about to leave a colony in which to all appearance they are doing so well.

Dated 14th August, 1868.

From—F. M. CHADWICK, Esq., Immigration Agent,

To—The Administrator of St. Lucia.

I have the honor to forward annexed a return of African immigrants residing on estates for the half-year ended the 30th June last.

These immigrants, as I have already reported, are fast making themselves independent of the estates, and have settled in different parts of the Island. Many of them have houses of their own and large provision grounds; and, when it suits them, they work on the estates by contract, and many of them have inter-married with the Creoles, and it is thus quite impossible for me to get any fuller return of them than the one which I now forward.

The return shows that 56 adults performed 5,176 days' work during the half-year, and earned and received the sum of £249-2, being an average of 92 days' work each, and £4-8-11.

Two births occurred during the half-year, and no death has been brought to my notice.

On my visits to the estates during the half-year, I saw some of these immigrants, who appeared strong and healthy; they are very industrious and well behaved, as the extract from the Register of the Royal Jail shows,—there being only three committed during the half-year.

Dated 14th August, 1868.

From—F. M. CHADWICK, Esq., Immigration Agent,

To—The Administrator of St. Lucia.

I have the honor to forward annexed a return of Indian immigrants in the Island for the half-year ended 30th June last.

I have visited and inspected the immigrants resident on the several estates twice during the half-year, and found their condition most satisfactory; their health being good, they were fully and regularly employed, and paid as when under indenture—men receive one shilling per day and women 10 pence.

The return shows that the adults, numbering 695, performed 59,060 days' work during the half-year, and earned and received the sum of £2,814-2-7, being an average of 84 days' work, and £4-0-11 each.

There were 10 births during the half-year, five deaths on estates, and six in depôt—making a total of 11 deaths.

Four hundred and twenty-five of these immigrants received during the half-year bounty money to the amount of £3,097 in lieu of back passages to India, to which they were entitled, being an average of £7-5-8½ per head; of this number 122 left the colony for Trinidad and Demerara, having obtained the necessary license from me.

Two hundred and fifty-seven have applied for back passages, and paid into the Treasury £383-2-6 as outfit money.

Of the immigrants by the Ships Palmyra, Francis Ridley, Victor Emanuel and Zemindar, 86 adults remain who have not applied either for bounty or return passages, and I have, therefore, reason to believe that they are waiting, until those by the Ulysses shall be entitled to claim bounty or back passages, to make up their minds as to what they shall do. Those by the Ulysses will have completed their eight years' industrial residence, on the 17th February next; there are 220 adults of them at present in the Island.

The depôt for sick and infirm coolies was closed on the 30th June, and the inmates, 14 in number, were transferred to the General Asylum, where every care is taken of them, and six receive allowances from me weekly in lieu of maintenance therein.

I annex an extract from the Register of the Royal Jail, showing that 20 coolies were committed during the half-year, five of whom were convicted of larceny and sentenced to long periods of imprisonment by the Supreme Criminal Court, the remainder for short periods for minor offences.

I have impressed upon the coolies who are about to return to India the necessity for placing through me in the Colonial Bank the amount of their savings which they purpose having remitted to India, and they are daily coming to me with small sums,—the sum $1,547-26 is now in the Bank to their credit.

F. M. CHADWICK,
Immigration Agent.

The 11th August 1868.

No. 574, dated 5th September, 1868.

From—His Excellency R. M. MURRAY, Lieut. Govr. of the Windward Islands, Barbados,

To—His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, &c., &c., &c.

I am gratified to be able to forward to your Grace a Despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of St. Vincent covering another satisfactory half-yearly report on the condition of the immigrants in that colony.

No. 499, dated 28th August, 1868.

From—His Excellency G. BERKELEY, Lieutenant Governor of St. Vincent,

To—His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor of the Windward Islands, Barbados.

I have the honor to transmit to your Excellency the report* of the Immigration Agent for the half-year ending 30th June last, together with the usual schedules.

* 24th August 1868.

The number of immigrants on the 31st December 1867 was 695; during the ensuing six months they had increased to 705,—the difference being attributable to the excess of births over deaths during the half-year.

The Immigration Agent reports that the result of a recent inspection of the estates shows that all the regulations required by law have been carried out, and that the earnings of the laborers are on nearly every estate in excess of what they were the previous half-year.

The Immigration Agent also continues to represent in a favorable light the progress of the system of immigration in this colony.

Dated 24th August, 1868.

*From—*J. H. BROWN, Esq., Immigration Agent, St. Vincent,

To—The Colonial Secretary.

I have the honor to present my report on the condition of the immigrants located in this colony for the half-year ended 30th June last.

2. The usual schedules contain nearly all the information that is left for me to convey on this occasion, viz.—

Schedule A—Births.

Ditto B—Deaths.

Ditto C—Exhibiting number of Indian immigrants on the 31st December 1867 and 30th June 1868, the intermediate births and deaths and particulars of labor and earnings.

Schedule D—Number of indented Portuguese and Africans on 31st December 1867 and the 30th June 1868.

Schedule E—Crime.

3. I have visited since June the estates whereon Indian laborers are placed, and met all matters as regulated by law. The employers do not find the immigrants per Newcastle so industrious as those introduced per Countess of Ripon in 1866, but Schedule C evidences an improvement, as the earnings are larger on nearly every estate than they were in the previous half-year.

4. The mortality is brought up to eight by the decease of five people who arrived subject to the disease which proved fatal. The births are 18—an excess of 10 over deaths.

5. No cooly during the half-year has complained to me of his employer. The relations between master and servant are very satisfactory.

6. In my last report I wrote that immigration was proceeding towards its objects—the promotion of agriculture and the improvement and happiness of those embraced by its provisions; and as I am enabled to say that this desirable state is uninterrupted, I am fully justified in reporting the working of the plan to be in a favorable and promising condition.

No. 476, dated 31st August 1868.

I have to acknowledge your letter of 6th instant, with a Despatch from the Officer administering the Government of the Windward Islands, enclosing the usual half-yearly reports to the 30th June last from the Governor of St Lucia and the Immigration Agent on the condition of the Indian immigrants and liberated Africans in that Island.

No. 146, 18th August.
14th August 1868.

2. It appears from the Immigration Agent's report and returns that the number of Indian immigrants in the colony on the 30th June last was 1,079, of whom 902 were on estates, and 145, including an interpreter, were non-resident. Of the remainder 32 were in depôt, or in asylums, or in jail.

The number of births were 10 and of deaths 11. The number of days' work performed by 695 coolies was 59,060, and the amount earned £2,814-2-7, giving an average of 84 days' work, and £4-0-11 in wages for each laborer. Four hundred and twenty-five of the coolies commuted their right to back passage for £3,097, of which number 122 emigrated to Trinidad and Demerara; 257 have applied for back passages and paid into the Colonial Treasury £383-2-6 for outfit money; 86 others are waiting to make up their minds until the 220 who arrived in the Ulysses have completed their eight years' industrial service in February next.

3. The number of committals to jail during the half-year were 20, chiefly for petty offences, but five were for larceny, involving sentences from three months to three years.

4. The Immigration Agent reports that the liberated Africans are rapidly making themselves independent of the estates, intermarrying with the Creoles, and settling down, for which reasons no accurate return of their number can be given. Fifty-six adults of this class had performed 5,176 days' work in the half-year, and earned £249-2, equal to an average of 92 days' work, and £4-8-11 in wages for each person. Two births and no deaths had been reported.

5. As regards the general condition of both classes of immigrants, the reports are very satisfactory.

Dated 12th October, 1868.

No. 574, dated 5th September 1868.

24th August.

I have to acknowledge your letter of 6th instant, with the copy of a Despatch from the Officer administering the Government of the Windward Islands, enclosing the report of the Immigration Agent of St. Vincent for the half-year ended 30th of June last.

2. The number of Indian immigrants on estates on the 30th June last was 701 under indenture, and four not under indenture, making a total of 705, besides women and children, of whom no return is now made. The aggregate number of days on which labor was performed was 58,327, of days absent from sickness or holidays 25,742, and from idleness 8,409. The gross amount of earnings was $9,207-81, and the average individual earnings was 15¾ cents per day.

3. The births were in excess of the deaths, being 18 of the former to eight of the latter. This is a marked improvement over the previous half-year, when the births were 10 to 12 deaths. The death-rate in the last half-year was, moreover, somewhat enhanced by the decease of five people who arrived in the Newcastle on the 1st June 1867 suffering from disease.

4. There were also 30 Africans and eight Portuguese on estates in the Island. During the half-year six Africans were out of indenture, and eight Portuguese had deserted.

5. The number of committals during the half-year were eight, of which one was for arson, stated to have been committed by the prisoner whilst intoxicated, two for larceny, and the remaining five for petty offences.

6. The Immigration Agent states in his report that no cooly had complained to him of his employer, and that the relations between master and servant were very satisfactory.

7. The report is altogether of a favorable character, and calls for no action on the part of the Secretary of State.

15. Forgery.
16. Counterfeiting coin or uttering base coin.
17. Criminal breach of trust.
18. Criminal misappropriation of property.
19. Abetting the above offences.

ARTICLE VI.

The expense of any apprehension, detention, or surrender made in virtue of the foregoing stipulations, shall be borne and defrayed by the Government making the requisition.

ARTICLE VII.

The above Treaty shall continue in force until either of the high contracting parties shall give notice to the other of its wish to terminate it.

ARTICLE VIII.

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect any Treaty now existing between the high contracting parties, except so far as any Treaty may be repugnant thereto.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

LEGISLATIVE.

The following Bill was introduced into the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 21st December 1868, and was referred to a Select Committee with instructions to make their report thereon in a month :—

No. 31 OF 1868.

A Bill for the maintenance of the Rural Police in the North-Western Provinces.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to make further provision for the maintenance of the Rural Police in the North-Western Provinces of the Presidency of Fort William and to define the law relating to the appointment and duties of village watchmen in those Provinces; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

I.—PRELIMINARY.

Short title.

1. This Act may be called "The Rural Police (North-Western Provinces) Act."

Repeal of Acts.

2. Act No. II of 1865 (to provide for the maintenance of the Rural Police in the territories under the government of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces and elsewhere), and Act No. II of 1866 (to amend Act No. II of 1865), are hereby repealed.

Extent of Act.

3. This Act extends to every District in which Act No. II of 1865 was in force immediately before the passing hereof.

II.—TAXES.

Taxes leviable under this Act.

4. Three kinds of taxes shall be leviable under this Act (that is to say) 1°, a House Tax; 2°, an Estate Tax; and 3°, a Tax on Muáfídárs, Sub-proprietors and Nazránádárs.

1°.—The House Tax.

Power to assess house-tax.

5. The proprietor of every Muáfí, Nazráná or other estate situate in any District to which this Act applies shall have power to assess and collect in each year, from the occupant of every house on such estate, a sum not ex rupee.

The Collector of the District shall ha determine what shall, for the purposes tion, be held to be a house.

Time of paying house-tax.

6. All sums assessed under sectio be payable in advar revenue year next assessment, at the the first instalment of rents is ordinar in that year for lands comprised in to such estate.

Recovery of house-tax.

7. All sums s shall be recoverable were rent of land :

Provided that no person shall be ejected from any house in his occupation for non payment of any such sum.

Petition against assessment.

8. Any person assessed under section five, and unable to pay the amount of the assessment, may present a petition on unstamped paper to the Collector of the District, and such Collector may, if he thinks fit, remit wholly or in part the said assessment.

Complaints of illegal collection.

All complaints of illegal collection under section five shall be cognizable by the Collectors of Land Revenue; and the provisions contained in Act No. X of 1859 (to amend the law relating to the recovery of rent in the Presidency of Bengal), section twenty-three, as to institution, trial and appeal, shall apply to complaints under this section.

2°.—The Estate Tax.

Power to Collector to assess estate of proprietor failing to make sufficient assessment.

9. If, in any year, any such proprietor fails altogether to assess the sum mentioned in section five, or assesses under section five a sum which, in the opinion of the Collector of the District wherein the proprietor's estate is situate, is inadequate, it shall be lawful for such Collector to assess upon such estate a sum payable yearly by the proprietor thereof for the time being, and not exceeding in any year the amount which might have been assessed in the same year under the same section on the occupants of the houses in such estate, less ten per centum.

Power to assess estates.

10. It shall be lawful for the Collector, or for any officer making a settlement of land-revenue, to assess upon any Muáfí, Nazráná, or other estate situate in any District to which this Act applies, a sum to be paid yearly by the proprietor thereof for the time being not exceeding the aggregate amount of the sums payable in respect of such estate or by the occupants of the houses thereon under sections five and nine, less ten per centum.

Such assessment shall be in addition to the municipal cess or percentage (if any) levied for the maintenance of rural police on the land-revenue payable in respect of such estate.

Alteration of assessment.

11. The sum assessable under section ten may from time to time, with the sanction of the Local Government, be altered by the Collector or officer aforesaid.

3°.—The Tax on Muáfídárs, Sub-proprietors, and Nazránádárs.

Power to levy cess on Muáfídárs, Sub-proprietors, and Nazránádárs.

12. Besides the assessments made under section ten, it shall be lawful for the Collector or for any such officer as aforesaid, to levy in the case of any Muáfí or Nazráná estate upon the Muáfídárs, or (where a settlement has been made) on the Sub-proprietors, or on the Nazránádárs, a municipal cess, at the assessed jama at the same rate as the estate would have been charged with, had it not been held under a Muáfí or Nazráná title.

Mode and time of paying assessments.

The Local Government may from time to time prescribe by notification in the official Gazette, by what instalments and at what times the assessments payable under sections ten and twelve shall be paid, and all sums assessed under either of those sections shall be recoverable as if they were arrears of revenue.

III.—Application of Taxes.

Application of taxes levied under this Act.

14. Subject to the orders of the Local Government, all taxes levied under this Act in any District shall, in the first instance, be applied to the maintenance of the Village Police in such District, and for the purpose of this section, 'maintenance' shall be deemed to include their wages, the price of all necessaries and accoutrements supplied to them, rewards and other incidental expenses.

The surplus (if any) may be applied by the Local Government, at its discretion, to the sanitary improvement of the District, or to any other useful purpose therein.

IV.—Accounts of Taxes.

Accounts to be kept.

15. Accounts of the taxes levied under this Act and of the application thereof shall be kept by such persons and in such form, and shall be furnished at such times and to such officers as the Local Government shall, by rules to be published in the official Gazette, from time to time, prescribe.

Accounts to be open to public.

16. Such accounts shall be open to public inspection at all reasonable times without the payment of any fee.

Failure to keep or furnish accounts.

17. Any proprietor failing to comply with any rule made under section fifteen, shall be liable, on conviction before a Magistrate, to a fine not exceeding one hundred rupees, and every such fine shall when recovered be applied for the purposes of this Act in the District where it is imposed.

V.—Village Watchmen.

Nomination of village watchmen.

18. Every person authorized to nominate a person to the office of village watchman shall, within fifteen days after the occurrence of a vacancy in the office, nominate a proper person to the post, and communicate the nomination to the Magistrate of the District.

Appointment or rejection of nominee.

The person so nominated shall, after due enquiry into his age, character and ability, be appointed or rejected by such Magistrate at his discretion, or by some officer authorized by him in that behalf.

Failure to appoint.

19. In default of such nomination within the said fifteen days, or if a nomination has been made but the nominee is rejected, the Magistrate of the District shall appoint such person as he thinks fit to the vacancy.

Duties of village watchmen.

20. Any village watchman appointed under this Act shall be liable to perform within the limits of his village, and in addition to his other duties, all or any of the duties imposed on Police officers by Act No. V of 1861 (for the regulation of the Police); and for any neglect or disobedience in his official capacity, he shall be liable to the penalties which he would have incurred had he been a Police officer subject to the provisions of that Act and guilty of neglect or disobedience as the case might be.

VI.—Miscellaneous.

Power to make rules.

21. The Local Government may, from time to time, make rules, consistent with this Act, for the guidance of officers in all matters connected with its enforcement.

All such rules shall be published in the local official Gazette.

Power to extend Act.

22. The Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces and the Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb may respectively, by notification in the local Gazette, extend this Act to any part of the territories for the time being under their respective governments; and the Governor General of India in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, extend this Act to any Province for the time being under the immediate administration of the Government of India:

Provided that this Act shall have no operation in any village to which Act No. XX of 1856 (to make better provision for the appointment and maintenance of Police Chaukidárs in cities, towns, stations, suburbs and bazárs in the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal), or Act No. VI of 1868 (to make better provision for the appointment of Municipal Committees in the North-Western Provinces, and for other purposes), or any other special municipal law shall have been extended, so long as such Act or law continues in force in such village.

Repeal of inconsistent rules.

23. From the date of any such extension of this Act, so much of any rule having the force of law, in operation in the territories to which the extension is made, as is inconsistent with any provision of this Act, shall cease to have effect therein.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The Government of India has lately received from the Government of the North-Western Provinces a despatch of which the following is an extract:—

"When the Rural Police Act (Act II of 1865) was enacted, the provisions in force in respect of Khálsá estates were made applicable under section VIII to Muáfí and Nazráná villages.

"Those provisions were, first, a house assessment under that Act, and second, the 'municipal cess,' which is a percentage on the jama fixed at the settlement in discharge of the obligations of the proprietors for the entertainment of the village police. The manner in which this system works will be gathered from the enclosed copy of a circular* lately issued by this Government on the subject.

* No. 29, dated 5th June 1868.

"At the time the Act was passed, the municipal cess was fixed at 2¾ per cent. of the jama. But this was found to be inadequate for the payment of an efficient village constabulary. It was in consequence raised, under the orders of the late Lieutenant Governor, to 3⅞ on the assets, or 7¾ on the jama, which amount is found to be sufficient for the purpose, but not more.

"As, however, the former amount, according to the original rule, viz., 2¾ per cent. on the jama, is entered in the Act as leviable from Muáfí estates, the Collector is unable to assess such properties at a higher rate. At the same time, it is obvious that whatever burdens for police purposes are borne by Khálsá villages, should equally be borne by Muáfí villages, that is, that they should contribute in precisely the same proportion."

The Local Government accordingly propose that, for section eight of the Rural Police Act, a section be substituted, which will be found in section 12 of the present Bill.

The Rural Police Act having already been once amended, namely, by Act II of 1866, it has been thought desirable to repeal and re-enact those measures instead of adding a third Act to the two in which the law on the subject is now contained.

the new rules that "the maximum period of furlough, which can be granted to any Officer during the whole period of his service is limited to six years," is qualified by the declaration in rule XXIX that "whatever aggregate amount out of the three years' furlough and three years' sick leave under the rules until now at force at present remains to be taken by an Officer under the old rules, shall remain to be taken by him under the rules now promulgated." It seems clear therefore that "junior furlough" does not form a part of the maximum of six years' furlough admissible under the new rules, but that it should be treated as dies non, i.e., that it should neither be credited in an Officer's account as actual service qualifying for furlough, nor debited as furlough taken. Accordingly the entry in the fifth column of your statement against the name of Mr. Robinson should be one year, nine months, and twenty-two days, and the entry in the eighth column should be supplemented with the remark, that Mr. Robinson's leave may be extended up to the 4th April 1870 on an allowance of Rs. 1,000 per mensem, and may be further extended on medical certificate up to the 4th April 1871 on a subsistence allowance of Rs. 400 per mensem.
